—Try our job department.

—Bring in your spring ad's.

—Renew your subscription promptly.

—These fine days gives the farmer a chance to get to town.

—The A. O. U. W. will give a social this evening at the K. P. Hall, over J. V. Weckbach's store.

—One plain drunk before Judge Mathews this morning. Paid fine of $5 and costs and was discharged.

—Two new consolidated engines arrived this morning, Nos. 177 and 178, from the Baldwin Locomotive works at Philadelphia.

—We would be glad to see Plattsmouth well represented at the Prohibition State Convention, to be held at Lincoln Feb. 15.

—John Hartigan ordered yesterday a Remington type writer at a cost of $67.50. It is a standard complete writer and will be added to the home office.

—The wife of Ami Todd is still in a very precarious condition. She is suffering from pneumonia, and unless she can get immediate relief, little hope is entertained of her recovery.

—A very pleasant progressive euchre party was given by Mrs. Birdie Morgan on Chicago Avenue last evening. A large number of her friends passed an enjoyable time, after which Mrs. Morgan served her guests with an elegant lunch.

—A rumor on the streets to-day says the Cass County bank was about to sue the sheriff for conversion of property, should he sell the Bon Ton stock on execution. The sheriff says however, he has good bonds of indemnity and will obey orders, unless settled, which is highly probably.

—O. P. Paulson, proprietor of Paulson's wood works, 24th and Grant streets, Omaha, was in the city yesterday taking plans and specifications for the mill work to furnish the fine residence of O. H. Ballou. Mr. Paulson has one of the best plants in Omaha and contractors would do well to figure with him before purchasing elsewhere.

—Magdaline Herold and Herman Herold, her husband, exchanged their grape farm southeast of town, to Ed Jockin for his 6th street cottage. Fifteen acres of the Herold farm was valued at $3000 and the Jockin cottage at $2300. The value of the Herold farm was placed at $200 per acre. Their object is to move to town and school their children.

—There are two cases to come up for hearing tomorrow before Judge Pottenger. One is Wm. H. Baker vs. E. A. Owens, the other Plummer, Perry & Co., of Lincoln, vs. C. W. Snyder, of Cedar Creek. There are also two cases for Saturday: Sherman & Cutright vs. Jas. M. Cole, and John Sharp, by his next friend, A. N. Sullivan, vs. John H. Holback.

—Trouble occured yesterday in Miss Safford's room at the High school. It appears that Willie Cushing was very heedless and Miss Safford was compelled to punish him to obtain obedience and respect. The punishment was probably more severe than Miss Safford intended. Mrs. Cushing, the mother of Willie, complained to County Atty Berson, who advised her to lay in her complaint to the school board.

—In our ramble about the city this morning we happened in at W. J. Warrick's and found he had just received his first invoice of wall paper for the new year, from Westerbery, Jefferson & Co., New York. The designs are varied and artistic. Mr. Warrick also buys of Janeway & Carpenter, New Jersey; Robert Hoffs & Co., of Brooklyn, and Carry Bros., Philadelphia. His stock for the season will be the largest and most complete ever brought to the city. By buying direct from the manufacturers he is enabled to make the very lowest prices.

—Aaron Nutall of Burlington, Iowa, was in the city yesterday reviewing the experiences in days gone by with his old time friends, D. H. and J. Hawksworth. Mr. Nutall began engineering a good many years ago in England and his first work as an engineer in America was begun on the C. B. & Q., in 1871, with Abe Armstrong as fireman. He ran on that road several years, resigning he went West and investing in the mining interests. During the past few years he has been running on the Santa Fe Road. He left last night for Burlington where he thinks of starting in for the "Q." again.

PLATTSMOUTH'S ENTERPRISE.

The Work of the B. & M. Completed Last Year The Output of the Canning Companies.

During the year 1887, the B. & M. railroad, at their shops in this city, overhauled and repaired 125 engines, 150 baggage and passenger coaches, seventy way cars and nearly 2,300 freight cars, or an average of almost seven a day, and built two locomotives, twenty way cars, four locomotive boilers and about forty boilers for stationary engines, and eight sixty-foot combination coaches. Over $7,000,000 worth of material used by the road during the year passed through the hands of Supply Agent Wead. Of this amount $700,000 was expended for coal.

The Plattsmouth Canning Company put up 500,000 cans of vegetables, and the F. Carruth Canning company 238,000, a total of 738,000 cans or 30,750 cases. The pack this year was exceedingly light, however, owing to the bad weather. With such institutions as these and the prospect of one or two new railroads this summer, Plattsmouth may well look forward to the future with bright expectations.

Prohibition in Iowa.

It is very amusing for the temperate to listen to the whisky lovers' very thin arguments in favor of rum, — thin, most of them, that they will stand the climate of no country, nor the weather of any season. Some of these arguments are silly in the extreme, some ridiculous, and still others disgusting. How extremely silly, for instance, is the statement that there is just as much liquor drunk in Iowa now as before the prohibitory law was enacted. How ridiculous is the one that prohibition is a failure because it does not prevent all the old foxes from getting it, and how disgusting the argument brought to bear on the foreign element, that they would get a better price for their grain if vast quantities of it were used in the manufacture of whisky; and to the inhabitants of cities that saloon licenses would pay their expenses. If whisky is just as plenty now as formerly, why urge so many of its lovers moving to states where they have no such law? It is estimated that Nebraska cannot recover in the next 25 years, from the evil effects the scum floating over into Omaha from Iowa has had upon it, as a result of prohibition here. If prohibition will not prevent all old experts from getting liquor it will keep it out of the way of the youth. If it will make a better price for corn, and pay some city expenses, it will, on the other hand, increase crime ten-fold, and double the taxes for its prosecution, not to say anything about the misery and suffering it causes thousands of innocent ones daily. Let us give prohibition a fair trial, and some one has said that twenty five years is a short enough time, then if it is prove a failure, we will try something else.—Red Oak, (Ia.,) Independent.

PERSONAL.

Dr. John Black was in Omaha to-day.

Miss Helen Kayley was an Omaha passenger this morning.

J. E. Morris and wife were bound for the metropolis this a. m.

Attorney J. M. Haldeman, of Weeping Water, was in the city to-day.

Mrs. T. C. Kelley left this morning for St. Joseph, Mo., to visit with friends.

C. H. Smith and wife, of Wymore, passed through on No. 5 this morning.

Gen. G. S. Smith was down from Omaha last night and returned home this morning.

Dan O'Rourk goes to Missouri Valley, Mo., in a few days, for the purpose of starting a restaurant.

O. H. Ballou of Omaha was in the city yesterday looking after his interests connected with his elegant residence now in course of construction.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Eavans were in the city yesterday on their semi-annual circuit of piano-tuning. They left this morning for Red Oak, Iowa.

Martin Maguire accompanied his sister, Miss Katie, to Omaha this morning, where she will join with her sister Anna and start this evening for Hillsdale New York, where they go on a visit.

To The Public.

A few days ago There was an article in THE HERALD concerning me which I would like to call attention to. Of course it looked very bad of me to go away as I did, but I did not think it would make such trouble as it did. I only went home for a short time. I wish to say I did not mean the harm that it done me, nor to beat any one out of anything. I will ask the people of Plattsmouth not to look down on me, for I will do better in the future.

VOLAPUK.

Origin and Character of the "New World Language."

From the Hartford Times.

This cabalistic word is not a part of an Indian medicine man's incantation, as we might on first hearing it suppose, but the name of a new language, and, as the word really signifies, a world language. No nation ever spoke Volapuk, no one ever made love or a Fourth of July oration in Volapuk; it is a creation, a homunculus, a scientifically constructed business language. Whether it will live and make for itself a place among its natural born competitors remains to be seen.

About ten years ago Johann Martin Schleyer, then a priest of the Catholic Church, now retired and living at Constance, Germany, published a scheme of a universal language especially adapted for commerce and international communication, which was briefly as follows:

1. The word-forms should be derived from the simplest and most expressive roots of the different living languages.

2. In structure it should be perfectly regular—the adjective, adverb and verb should be regularly formed from the substantive and invariably or the same termination. There should be one declension and one conjugation and there should be no artificial gender. In a word, it should be a perfect language, selecting the best from each existing language and rejecting the useless, irregular and difficult.

In accordance with this plan Schleyer and those associated with him have constructed Volapuk.

In order to give a better idea of this "world language" we will take the word "past," meaning nature, and trace it through some of its grammatical forms. First, its declension—Nat, nata, natam; natis; meaning nature, of nature, to nature, nature, nature (vocative). To form the adjective "ik" is added, and we have "natik," (natural). To form the adverb "o" is added to the adjective form—"natiko" (naturally). Every Volapuk noun, whose meaning permits, is susceptible of the changes. Comparison of adjectives is effected by adding the ending "am" for the comparative and "um" for the superlative—"natikam, natikum, jonikam, fidelam, fidelum." The numerals run easily off the tongue—bal, (1), kil, fol, kal, mal, val, jil, zal, bals (10), kils (20) etc. The personal pronouns are the same used throughout as follows: Ob (I), ol (thou), om (he), ola (she), ot (it), on (one), ons (people), ons (they). To form the possessive pronouns the adjective ending is affixed, as "obik," meaning my.

The conjugation of the verb is a marvel of simplicity. The verb form is composed of three parts. (1) The root; (2) the personal ending; (3) the tense prefix. Taking the old familiar verb "love," we proceed as follows:

	lofob — I love.
	lofol — You love,
	lofom — He loves.
Plural	lofobs — We love.

To conjugate the different tenses.

alofob	I loved,
clofol	Thou last loved,
ilofom	He had loved,
olofot	She will love,
ulofos	It will have loved, etc.

The passive voice is formed by the further prefixing of the consonant "p," as polofof (she will be loved). To express even so complicated a form as "We shall have been highly honored," in Volapuk one would say simply "Pulsetimobs!"

So simple is this wonderful language in structure, and so familiar are its roots that it is very easily and quickly acquired. Already it has gained wide favor upon the Continent, and is rapidly proving its practical usefulness. In many business houses in Paris a placard bearing the word "Volapukon" (there they speak Volapuk) is displayed, while its professors and teachers are numerous and enthusiastic.
