SOUTH OMAHA NEWS.

The Postoffice Fight.

The delegation that visited Congressman Connell Tuesday to demand Postmaster Cockrell's removal retured evidently well pleased with the result of their visit, but as mum as could be in regard to the promises made. If it is true, as reported, that the packers propose hereafter to do their business with the Omaha postoffice, there will be a big hole made in the receipts of the South Omaha station. It will then drop back into an insignificant position instead of ranking as the third postoffice in the state.

All About Annexation.

M. Batella is a market gardener and was dead set against annexation. John Tizak wanted the municipalities joined. After the election Tizak's anger at Batella for being fernist him led him to do rash things. He broke down all the fences around Batella's garden patch and destroyed the growing green groceries above ground, root and branch. Batella had Tizak arrested, and Justice Levy will adjudicate the matter. The parties live in Albright's Annex.

Daughters of Rebekah Social.

Tonight the Daughters of Rebekah will give another of their enjoyable socials at Masonic hall. Mrs. Claude Talbott will deliver the address of welcome. Mrs. D. F. Bayless, Miss Flora Thompson, Mrs. J. C. Graham, Miss Swiss Elliott, Miss Nellie Bayless, Miss Mabel Silver and Miss Julia Martin will furnish numbers on the programme. The dialogue, "The Phantom Doughnuts," will be participated in by Mrs. John Gorman, Mrs. William Anderson, Mrs. J. C. Graham and Misses Mary Wooten, May Carlin and Barbara Heyman. The lodge desires everybody to attend the social.

In Police Circles.

Four colored men are held at the police station for the Omaha authorities. Their names are William Greenfield, Frank Hay, Richard Parks and Bob Denton. They are suspected of burglarizing a house in Omaha.

James Russell, whose vagrancy was conspicuous, was fined $7.50 and will board it out at the county jail. Hugh McNearny, another vagrant, was dismissed.

William Demire and James McGee, both of whom were decidedly drunk, were assessed $5.50 each.

AUSTRALIAN CANNIBALS.

They Prefer Their Enemies, But Sometimes Eat Their Friends.

Upon the whole, life among the northern Australians could hardly be desirable on any terms, and on their own it seems not acceptable, says a writer in Harper's Magazine. Their religion is a fear, their existence a series of escapes from starvation and homicide, their morality a mere tribal obligation to the most elementary fealties, their polity an ultimation of the principle that might makes right within the tribe as well as without; a despotism of the strong hand tempered by cunning. In the society of these children of nature certain persons skilled in devil-devil, as they call the invocation of their supreme demon, and certain old ladies accomplished in catering to their simple appetite for human flesh are the ruling influences.

They are all cannibals, as opportunity offers; and in default of enemies to eat they will sometimes eat their friends; they will even eat their children, though this is exceptional. Otherwise they live mostly upon poisonous roots, which have to be carefully prepared; upon worms and grubs; upon snakes and lizards, and upon such birds and beasts as they can kill, though they are not good hunters and are poorly weaponed for the chase. They go naked, and almost houseless; a shelter of boughs is their conception of a house.

After four years among them, and the bestowal of inestimable benefits in tobacco, Mr. Lumholtz could not flatter himself that he had ever succeeded in appealing to any sentiment but fear in them; they did not kill him because they imagined him an adept in devil-devil, and because they were afraid of the baby of the gun, as they called his revolver; but they would not have eaten him, because they had found that, upon the whole, white men did not agree with them. In spite of their fears they had accesses of treachery in which they longed so much to kill him that it was never safe to let them get behind him; and apparently no kindness could win them to affection. On such conditions life began to be for him at moments the possession that it seemed to them, and he experienced a deep despondency, mixed with indifference, from which he had to pull himself together with a strong effort of the will at last, in order to escape from the physical miasm of their most miserable existence. They were children with no lovable traits that he could discover, and cruel and filthy in their ignorance.

In spite of their abominable customs and their squalid conditions the life of the open air and of the woods and hills is so wholesome that fine physical types are not rare, and in this fact there might be some hope for the race if it met the least justice in contact with the whites. But on the frontiers, says Mr. Lumholtz, "any savage discovered by the white men runs the risk of being shot. Poison was laid in the way of the blacks once when I was in Queenstown * * * A squatter * * * shot all the men on his run because they were cattle-killers, the women because they gave birth to cattle-killers and the children because they would in time become cattle-killers."

THE BLIND MATCH SELLER'S DOG.

Its Owner Refuses Many Big Offers for His Faithful Companion.

Pedestrians in Upper Broadway have long been familiar with Garrett Roach, the blind match seller, and Nero, the famous dog which daily leads him to the corner where his vocation is plied. Nero is a handsome mixture of bull and English mastiff, and is one of the most intelligent canines in the city. The other evening while a New York Sun reporter was caressing the animal and conversing with his master, a well-dressed young man who had stopped a moment to examine the dog, made a few inquiries regarding him and followed them with an offer of $100 for his possession. It was promptly refused by Mr. Roach, who said the animal was invaluable.

A fruitful subject was introduced, however, and the blind man plunged into relations of previous offers he had received for the animal, among them being one of $300 from De Wolf Hopper, the actor. The most interesting incident, however, was thus told by Mr. Roach:

"One afternoon about a week ago a young lady whom those about me afterward said was very pretty and handsomely dressed stopped to look at Nero. At first she seemed afraid to approach him. Suddenly he commenced to bark and she wanted to know the reason. I told her he was asking for candy, and she at once sent another young lady who was with her for a supply. Together they fed it to the dog and from their remarks they must have enjoyed watching him as much as he did eating it. Then they wanted to know all about him, and after I had told them the manner in which he cared for me, the one who had first spoken offered me $200 if I would part with him. Of course I had to refuse her, for he's worth more than his weight in gold; but she was very persistent, and finally raised her offer to $500. I said I couldn't let him go at any price and after many expressions of regret at her inability to obtain him she departed."

A gentleman living in his own house on the Boulevard Pereire, Paris, has just had an unpleasant adventure. At an early hour one morning he was awakened by the loud pealing of his doorbell, and on going to the gate he found to his horror a man hanging, as he thought, to the bell wire. When he returned to the house after some delay he discovered that the man whom he supposed to be dead had taken advantage of his absence to possess himself of all the valuables which he could conveniently remove and had got clear away.
