SIMPLE FRENCH COSTUME FOR THE COUNTRY FROM HARPER'S BAZAR

A simple madras gown for the country has its corsage composed of broad tucks in front, the upper one framing a square removable plastron of black satin, which fabric also forms a pinted girdle and narrow cuffs, contrasting harmoniously with the Dresden colors of the gown. The back of the waist is closely fitted.

The peasant skirt, slightly gored at the front and sides, is made with four deep tucks encircling it below the knee. It is gathered at the waist, and its width is three yards and three-quarters. The proper cut of the gown can be obtained only from the cut paper patterns published by Harper's Bazar, where it appears.

The sailor hat has a black satin band, and the parasol is of plain straw-colored silk.

Approximate quantity of material for gown—twelve yards of madras, one of black satin.

No Women Nurses for Cuba.

It is officially announced that no women will be accepted as nurses for Cuba. G. W. Sternburg, the surgeon general of the United States navy, says: "We have a hospital corps of trained men, whose duty it is to go with the troops in the field, and if we need additional assistance in Cuba or on the gulf coast I shall accept only those who are immune to yellow fever, from having had the disease or passed through one or more epidemics. In case hospitals are established further north, we may require the help of trained women nurses. Many have volunteered. All applications are placed on file for future reference. A large number of patriotic women, who have had no special training as nurses, have also volunteered. While I fully appreciate their motives, there is no probability that their services can be utilized."
