Louisville Lawyers' Fees.

"The largest fee ever paid to a member of the Louisville bar, so far as I ever heard," said a prominent lawyer recently, "was something [illegible] J. B. Stewart was [illegible] lucky [illegible] and up to that time he was considered a very ordinary practitioner, but from his share he made his fame and fortune. He was counsel in a suit brought about [illegible] or 1858. I do not remember which. To set aside the deeds to all that property of which Cave Hill and New Broadway is now a part. He engaged Judge [illegible] Peterson, and, I believe, Henry Clay to assist him. They won the suit, and after he had divided with them he had a comfortable fortune left for his own fee. He is now in Washington and is a wealthy man.

"Another big fee was paid to Judges Harlan and Wood by William Williams, Jr., in a suit by him to set aside a resulting trust made by him to his father. The case was a very remarkable one, and the decision, which was in favor of the plaintiff, while it recognized the statute in regard to resulting trusts, established the doctrine of oral trusts. I think the case is reported in 9th Bush, and I remember that I once won a case in Bullitt county on the precedent established by the decision. The fee in this case amounted to $30,000."

A bigger fee than either of these was once received by a Louisville lawyer, however. The lucky man was Colonel Bob Woolley, and the client who paid it was Gen. Simon B. Buckner, who was such a strong candidate for governor last year. Before the war Gen. Buckner was an officer in the regular army. He owned a large amount of real estate in Chicago. As soon as hostilities began he went south, and when it was over he came out with the stars of a lieutenant general. To save his property from confiscation he made it over in trust to a friend. When the war was over some hitch came up and he found himself unable to reclaim it. A million dollars was involved and the general brought suit. Col. Woolley was his counsel, and after a hard struggle the general's property was restored to him by due process of law. Colonel Woolley received $100,000 as his fee in the case, and is probably the largest one ever received by a Louisville lawyer.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Telegraphing with the Teeth and Eyelids.

J. T. Norris, of Springfield, O., the detective, does a trick that probably no other man in the country can imitate. He takes a silver coin, usually a dollar, and places it on his tongue between his teeth. With his tongue he strikes it against his teeth with the sound of a telegraphing instrument, the opening and closing of the circuit being exactly imitated. Norris used to be an operator, and by means of the coin can telegraph words so distinctly that any telegrapher can easily read the message. In this manner he telegraphed fifty words a minute. A Republican reporter wrote out a message on a Western Union blank, and handed it to the detective. The two operators in charge at the Southern took down the words as fast as Norris produced them with the coin. The message was rapidly sounded and written down and all three copies coincided exactly. Mr. Norris can stand up before a telephone, and in a novel manner telegraph a message which any telegrapher can read with great facility. But the most wonderful thing is to see him telegraph with his eyelids. The dots and dashes of the telegraphic alphabet he indicates by a quick or less rapid opening and shutting of the eyelids. In this manner he can converse with an expert without uttering a sound.—St. Louis Republican.

When Woman's Toothache.

She [illegible] in at the dentist's door, says the Lewiston Journal, and said she had a tooth she believed had a cavity in it, and she'd have it out if he wouldn't mind. The dentist assured her he never hurt anybody. She said she could not let her teeth would hurt awful hard. They wasn't like anybody's else, [illegible] said he guessed that was so. She said she knew it would kill her to have a tooth pulled, for she couldn't stand anything. She knew she should faint, scream or do something horrid, she was like of that; she always did. [illegible] he didn't believe she would do any [illegible] badly, but she said she should, [illegible] she knew she should; she was [illegible] like anybody else in this world, and [illegible] teeth were awfully sensitive. [illegible] Ellen Jones could sit right down [illegible] and have any amount of teeth [illegible] and the like of that, but she never [illegible] she knew she couldn't. She [illegible] could fly right up through the [illegible] think of it. The dentist said she [illegible] like something, but she said she [illegible] didn't, she shouldn't dare to. She [illegible] heard of a girl out west who took [illegible] gas and she laughed three [illegible] and the like o' that, and all the [illegible] went crazy; and she didn't want to drive her family crazy, for if the [illegible] went away they were going to [illegible] this summer and go down to the [illegible] and she was doing everything she [illegible] to make it hard for the girl so [illegible] could go away, for she'd heard the [illegible] lovely rink down to the beach [illegible] like o' that, and she wanted [illegible] And then she dentist if he thought her mouth would be a good one to [illegible] teeth to. He said she'd better [illegible] and let him look at the one that [illegible] but she said she guessed she would trouble him to-day. The tooth did [illegible] ache any then; she didn't know so [illegible] could tell which one it was and maybe 'twas only tired, she'd chewed so much spruce gum this spring and like [illegible] that; anyway she wouldn't bother him. She 'spoed dentists were awful busy folks. And she gave place to an unshaven man jumped five feet in the air when the dentist pulled out a molar with inch fangs.

A correspondent writes: Will you please inform me when straw hats can be worn without exciting comment? Certainly. Straw hats can be worn without exciting comment when worn on the head. But when they are worn cavorting along the street in a gale of wind you must expect a remark or two.

French And English Cooking.

The theories of the French and English cooks vary very widely. The former contend that all solid meats should be subjected to a long, though gradual, action of heat, so that all the fibrous parts may be thoroughly cooked, and thus leave but little work, according to their views, for the digestive organs to perform. The English cook, on the other hand, allows but little time in his roasting and broiling processes, or even in boiling, and declares that in any other plan the genuine flavor of the meat is destroyed or lost. Another notable difference lies in their appreciation of flavors. The French cook can make an almost endless variety of these from the same meat, in neither of which will the original one, belonging to the meat itself, be recognized. The English cook takes a directly opposite view. With him no flavor can be invented which can approach that of the meat. The flavor of this must not be meddled with. Whether beef, or mutton, or lamb, or game is to be the dish, that process is the best which can keep the flavor of each distinct and distinguishable overall above any sauce or condiment that may accompany it. Indeed, no sauce that a French cook could concoct could be made equal, according to the notion of the Englishman, the juice oozing from a nicely roasted joint or rib when sliced by the carver. There is another difference and one in which we think the Frenchman has the best side of the argument, and this is in point of economy. The French cook, in all his processes, wastes nothing. Everything is of use to him; and much that would be thrown away by the English cook as of no value, the French with his ingenuity and skill succeeds in transforming into many dishes. Both methods, however, have their advantages, and we think a judicious combination of the two would bring the best system of cookery.—Cincinnati Gazette.

A New Type of Steamship.

The new national steamer, the America, is something more than a very fast vessel. Without doubt she is the fastest steamer afloat, but her wonderful speed has been obtained not by building her on the model of a lead pencil and by filling her with machinery. She has much greater proportionate breadth of beam than the Oregon; her machinery indicates 6,000 horse-power, as compared with the 16,000 horse-power of the Oregon's engines, while she burns 190 tons of coal daily, instead of the 127 burned by her rival. Her splendid performance on her first trip shows that the day of the narrow-beamed, enormously high-powered steamer is over. With a little more than half the horse-power and a little more than half the daily consumption of coal, the broad-beamed, steady ship will beat her narrow, high-powered rival.

The importance of the splendid success of the America can hardly be overrated. It proves that fast steamers can be operated at an immense reduction of what has hitherto been their necessary cost, thus enabling them to dispense with freight and to make a profit by carrying passengers only. It also proves that a narrow beam is not a necessary condition of speed, but that a vessel may possess both stability and speed. The America constitutes a new type of steamer, and is to some extent a solution of the problem how to combine speed with safety and economy.—New York Times.

How Congressmen Dress.

The republicans are the best-dressed people in both the Senate and House. They have better-kept beards, clean faces, and look as though they had from $2 to $5 in change in their pockets. They look as though they think more of public matters than about how to save $2,500 per annum out of $5,000 salary. They wear good clothes and polished shoes, and walk with the air of men confident of position, and above making the matter of personal appearance a matter of study. They leave external matters to good tailors and bootmakers, pay the bills, eat good beef and trimmings, shave often, and have their heads shampooed, so as to quicken clear thought and smell sweet to their friends and wives. Some of the democrats are just as well kept and glide through the House like gentlemen. Let us add here that dress does not make the gentleman; but it attracts gentlemen and suggests a clean skin. The plain democrats who come here from the people glory in being shod in nailed shoes and capped with a drooping, umbrella-like hat. Do these great fermenting minds care to think that the man with the biggest brains lately in the Senate, Roscoe Conkling, left his measure with his tailor when a boy, and never knows what he puts on except as he receives a package on the evening of the occasions as they come. Chester A. Arthur is the neatest man in Washington almost, and he has some brains too. Abe Hewitt, Allison, Edmunds and Randall are wearers of good broadcloth, well cut; so are dozens of others. Speaker Keifer is always ready for a day call. West, of Missouri, is always in well-pressed goods, and boldly wears a gold chain around his neck heavy enough to hold a yacht. Ex-Vice President Dorsey is the picture of respectability. Joseph M. Robinson looks like an Indian hard. Members who get lodgings in the suburbs for $3 a day, two meals [illegible] that, spend the time they should be working among their brethren [illegible] in the undecorated hands [illegible] questions, walking to and fro [illegible] to their seats in the Capitol [illegible] with [illegible] to discussing Indian Questions [illegible] other questions, [illegible] to and fro [illegible] to their seats in the Capitol [illegible] with [illegible] to discussing Indian Questions [illegible] other questions, walking
