DR. W. J. HORNE, Beatrice Neb., Jan. 16. 1883.

Dear Sir,—Since I wrote you last, I have experienced a most wonderful change; the pains have all left me and I have gained ten pounds, and feel ten years younger since I first got your Electric Belt, which was about forty-five days ago. I would not take $5,000 for my Belt if I could not get another. I would say to all who suffer with rheumatism, sciatica and kidney diseases, buy Dr. Horne's Electric Belt for one of his $50. Belts cured me of all these diseases in above time. Respectfully, W. W. BOOTH.

"THE GRAND OPERA."

Des Moines' New Temple of Music and the Drama.

The Grand Opera house, of Des Moines which has been in course of construction for some time past, will be opened to the public next Monday evening, by the Abbott Grand English Opera Company. The house was built by Mr. B. L. Harding and its cost will exceed $100,000, including site. The State Leader, in an extended description of the house, as it will appear on the opening night says: Above the balcony, and jutting out between the second and third story windows, will be a handsome illuminated sign bearing the legend "Grand Opera House." Over this again, brazen lettering set in the wall, of similar wording. The main entrance is 22 feet wide, and immediately at the threshhold is elegant encostic tiling, extending inward a distance of eight or ten feet to a flight of three marble steps, then a platform of ten feet more of tiling till you reach three large doorways leading into the lower part of the first floor of the auditorium. This will be the most popular part of the house as it slopes gradually toward the stage, and the auditor will obtain therefrom the best views of the stage, the frescoing and the rest of the audience. This floor is divided into various divisions; first the parquet, which is divided from the parquet circle by a series of nineteen Parisian stalls. In the rear of these stalls, and identical to what has been somewhat vulgarly known as the "dress circle," will be that division of the house designated parquet circle. Above this division of the house is the balcony, the front rows of which will doubtless be as popular as seats on the lower floor. The balcony is reached by a handsome double flight of stairs, reaching from the tiling in the main entrance, and a very pretty platform is arranged immediately opposite the main entrance to the balcony.

Over the balcony, and reached by a separate stairway from the main entrance, is the "region of the gods," the gallery, which, unlike most of those divisions of magnificent distances in theaters, has almost as good a view of the stage and all that transpires thereon as the more favored portions of the house.

The exact seating capacity of the house is 1,574. This includes 430 for the gallery, which is accommodated with comfortable cherry-stained benches, and 18 inches to on individual is allowed in figuring up its capacity. The parquet, parquet circle and balcony are seated with the most elegant chairs of any opera house in the country. They are gold lined, iron-framed and movable, and seat and back upholstered in mohair plush, the back being beautifully embossed and the iron frame work very ornamental.

Eight elegantly draped boxes charm the eye of the auditor on either side of the proscenium arch. The lower boxes are tinted blue and the upper ones red, and the drapings consequently will be draped accordingly in contrast with rich and costly hangings of damask. The nineteen stalls that circle the parquet are hedged in by brass railings, which are appropriately draped, and rich brussels carpeting is spread on the floors of all the boxes and stalls. Brussels carpeting is also being placed on all the walks of the different divisions of the house, as well as on the foyer. Mattings will deaden the footsteps on staircases and in the gallery.

There are nine exits in all—seven from the auditorium and two from the stage, and the auditorium exits are all so admirable arranged that they will be popular from the first, and consequently used habitually, instead of being depended on merely for the occasions when out-of-the-way egress is never thought of. From the lower floor there three exits—one along the north side of the building to the east, the main exit to the east, and a large double door into the alley to the south. The balcony, in addition to its main exit, has also a door leading on to a stairway on the alley; and the gallery is provided also with double exits—one on the alley and the other down along the interior of the north side of the building to Fourth street. All the exits are in plain sight of the audience, and, as they will be properly labeled, there can be no mistaking them. All open outward, and even if bolted would readily give away before ordinary pressure. Loss of life or injury in a panic in the Grand opera house seems almost an impossibility.

The stage of the Grand opera house is the largest in the west, and excelled in size by only two or three in the country, and by those only by a few feet in depth. It is 46 feet from front to rear and 66 feet wide. The distance from the stage floor—which is perfectly flat, not inclined, as in the old style,—to the rigging loft is 56 feet, and thus allows for the hoisting of any or all scenery in use. The scenery, however, is made to work both ways—to be shoved together or apart, to be elevated and dropped. The stage floor is honeycombed with traps, the most important being a movable bridge running clear across.

TRAINING PUGILISTS.

How It Is Done—The Diet and the Exercise—The Prize-Fighter's Ordeal.

An old trainer of pugilists thus explained his manner of operations to a Louisville Commercial reporter:

The very first thing to be done is to study the constitution of the subject; if he is delicately constituted the training course must be adapted to his strength, and even if he is a strong, healthy and tough man care must be taken not to overstrain him.

My first active work is to put my man upon a course of mild purgatives. This treatment expels poisonous humors, softens the internal fats, and renders the system susceptible to the regular training which follows as soon as the subject has been thoroughly cleaned out.

The next resort is to out-door exercise, such as walking and running, succeeded by heavy sweats if necessary to get rid of superfluous flesh; and, when the man is very large and fleshy, the occasional use of hot baths should be combined with the original medication. There is nothing so good as these hot baths to cool feverish blood and open the pores that give ventilation to the inter-organs. Without this cleansing and reducing process has been thoroughly done, all subsequent efforts of the trainer will be of no account.

As an example of a day's regular training, I get my man up early in the morning, allowing him nothing but a glass of sherry with an egg in it before breakfast, and start him out for a three mile walk at a moderate gait, thus bracing his nerves and giving him the benefit of the fresh morning air. Returning, a break fast is taken, consisting of gruel, a nice, lean mutton chop, dry toast without butter, boiled eggs and a cup of tea. He is now permitted to lounge or saunter about for an hour or so, and then dresses in extra clothing and starts out for a "sweat." He is walked out about seven miles at a strong gait, and back again at a very fast gait. On our return, instead of giving him hot gin or other stimulating drinks, as some trainers are in the habit of doing, I generally resort to a bowl of chamomile tea. Then stripping him to the buff, I rub his body until it is thoroughly dry and his skin is in a glow, and give him a cold shower bath, following it up with a cold plunge bath containing rock salt and vinegar, rubbing him from head to foot with a sponge while he is still in the bath. This has a curative effect upon all chafes and bruises resulting from his exercise, and at the same time hardens the flesh.

When my man comes out of his bath I wipe him perfectly dry and hand-rub him vigorously all ever the body, and allow him to lie down with a light sheet over him until his nerves become quiet after this violent exercise, then I get him up, and clad in clean linen and comfortable clothing, he walks leisurely around until the dinner hour. If he feels very thirsty I generally allow him to take a glass of old ale. At dinner the fare consists of beefsteak cooked as rare as his appetite and digestion can manage, dry toast, boiled eggs, and other articles of food not calculated to relax or purge.

After dinner I take him out for a walk of twelve miles or so, dressed in light clothing, and we go at a good sharp walk; not so rapidly however, as to get up excessive sweating. Returning, I set him to work at the dumb bells for a quarter of an hour, then to fight the "bag" for half an hour, using gloves if training for a glove fight. To cultivate quickness of action he is excercised at fighting the "bladder," and uses light dumb bells. Occasionally we take a row in a boat where the location admits of such exercise, or play at foot-ball, or any other proper athletic exercise as time allows. Then comes supper—tea, mutton-chop, dry toast and eggs, with other articles as allowed at dinner, but these extra dishes are not permitted according to the fancy of the man under training. An intelligent trainer will watch these as sharply as any physician does the diet of a very sick patient, and what I know to be improper food I rule out peremptorily.

After supper we take a leisurely stroll of two or three miles and back, and this constitutes the end of his day's work and he is ready to retire for the night. About an hour before going to bed I allow a bottle of Bass' ale and a bit of dry toast. Once in bed he receives a thorough hand-rubbing, and is disturbed no more until morning. This programme is repeated daily until the match in view takes place, unless, as sometimes happens, a man becomes feverish or off his feed, when the heavier work has to be suspended for a time.

A trainer's business is chiefly to get his man thoroughly sound, physically. Of course, I sometimes put on the gloves with my man, but he is supposed to understand the manly art before he comes under my care. Whatever defects I may observe in his "form" it is my duty to correct by proper instruction, but nothing beyond that.

The trainer must keep the party constantly under his eye, asleep or awake, as he is responsible to the backers for his man's conduct and condition.

In this country I have trained a large number of good men, among whom were Abe Hicken and Harry, his brother, and Johnny Moore. Abe Hicken was the light weight champion of the world when he came under my care. His contest was with Pete McGuire, who fought Chandler, of California, for $1,000 a side and the light weight championship of America. Harry Hicken fought Campbell for a similar money stake, and Moore met Dougherty of Philadelphia for a $1,000 stake. I trained Tracey for his great walking-match at Chicago, when he beat O'Leary's best time by three miles and a quarter and had two hours to spare. There is a fact connected with his performance that shows what careful training will accomplish. When he entered upon his walk of six days and nights he weighed 164 pounds and at the finish he weighed 160 pounds, while other contestants lost from twenty to thirty pounds each."

Some one here asked the trainer why it was regarded so necessary to train against fat and he replied: "Fat is death to a man's chances in any kind of an athletic contest. I've seen a fat gamecock of the best strain run from the pit and refuse to fight and fat bull-terriers drop over on their backs and howl at the approach of an adversary in better training. Take the race-course, a fat trotter will break into a gallop in spite of all that can be done, and lose the race. But the same animal in good training will stay every time. It is just so with men."

Causes Astonishment.

"Completely prostrated for days with indigestion and bilious fever. The effects of two bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters astonished me; visible improvement right off." Mr. Noah Bates, Elmira, N. Y.

ATLANTA'S VICTORY.

Culmination of a Long and Bitter Fight—The Capital of Georgia Permanently Located.

Cincinnatti Enquirer.

ATLANTA, Ga., August 15.—The vote by which the house to-day agreed to build a $1,000,000 capitol in Atlanta brings to culmination one of the most interesting chapters of the reconstuction history. When the refusal of Milledgeville to entertain colored members of the legislature and other like acts led to the selection of Atlanta by the military as the temporary capital, all those who had been prominent in the old government were arrayed against the impertinent young city. The sentimentalism of the people was outraged, and the dearest hopes of old men was to live to see the day when there would be assembled in Milledgeville, under the ancestral roof, a legislature of sons true to the soil. The question of the capital location was submitted to the people in the constitution of 1868, when Atlanta was chosen by a popular vote, or counted in, as was alleged to be the case with Bullock. A curiosity of the vote was that Baldwin county, in which Milledgeville is located, voted for Atlanta, while Fulton county, containing the latter city, voted for Milledgeville. The contest of the next ten years was bitter. It was a contest between the old element, clinging to Milledgeville, and the new element, who wanted to carve their fortunes anew. Macon, Columbus and Savannah, jealous of Atlanta's commercial growth, encouraged the claims of Milledgeville.

After the flight of Bullock the war against Atlanta and her new idea became intense, and one of the leading elements which called into existence the convention of 1877 was a desire to remove the archives back to the old city. During these years Atlanta was not idle. The purchase of the opera-house being built by Kimball was negotiated by the city, a large amount of money being sunk. The purchase of other property tended to give the state an interest in the city, and the increase of commerce had declared Atlanta to be the commercial entrepot of the state. After a bitter debate the convention of 1877 decided to submit the question to the people, not, however, until Atlanta had tacked on to the article a proposition to donate to the state the city hall square, or, in lieu thereof, ten acres anywhere else.

The campaign which followed was unexampled for bitterness. In Macon an indignant citizen brought his dog up, and, placing between his paws an Atlanta ballot, voted it. By clever campaigning Atlanta was again selected, but the fight did not end here. As long as the state was without a costly state building there still remained hope for the old town. Hence all opposing elements united in refusing to appropriate money for the erection of a new capitol. At last, however, the claims of Atlanta have grown so prominent that opposition has simmered down, and the bill which has for a week been under debate in the house, proposing the erection of a $1,000,000 capitol was passed by a good vote. A commission, of which the governor shall be a member, shall have charge of the work. The building is to be of granite quarried in Georgia, other things being equal, and is to be completed by 1889. The first year there will be appropriated $100,000, and each succeeding year until completed, $180,000.

This settles Atlanta as Georgia's permanent capital.

MAINE MEN.

From Bath, Me., we have received, under date of May 19th, 1883, the following statement of Geo. W. Harrison, the popular proprietor of "The Restaurant": "A few years since I was troubled so severely with kidney and bladder affection that there were brick dust deposits in my urine, and continual desire to urinate, with severe, darting, sharp pains through my bladder and side, and again, dull, heavy pressure very tedious to endure. I consulted one of our resident physicians, but I received no benefit from the treatment, and fearing that my symptoms indicated 'Bright's Disease,' the most dreadful of all diseases, I made up my mind that I must obtain relief speedily or I would be past cure. I consulted my druggist, Mr. Webber, and after ascertaining my symptoms, he recommended the use of Hunt's Remedy, as he knew of many successful cures effected by that medicine in similar cases here in Bath. I purchased a bottle, and before I had used the first bottle I found I had received a great benefit, as I suffered less pain, my water became more natural, and I began to improve so much that the second bottle effected a complete cure; and my thanks are due to Hunt's Remedy for restored health, and I cheerfully recommend this most valuable and reliable medicine to my friends as I consider it a duty as well as a pleasure to do so."

"Being well acquainted with Mr. George W. Harrison at the time of his sickness, referred to in the foregoing testimonial, I can certify to the correctness of the statement made by him.

"W. G. WEBBER, Druggist.

"Bath, Me., May 15, 1883."

Blacksmiths' Troubles.

Having had occasion to use a remedy for kidney troubles, I noticed an advertisement in one of the papers of the remarkable cures that Hunt's Remedy had made all over the country. I purchased a bottle at one of our druggists here in Manchester, and after using it for a short time found that it was helping me me wonderfully, and one bottle has cured me completely—have no indigestion, and am hearty and healthy for one of my years (65), and can truly say that Hunt's Remedy is a medicine that has real merit, and I do not hesitate to recommend it to the public in general. Mercury.

Has been more destructive to human health and life than war, pestilence and famine combined. So said a distinguished writer many years ago, and it is as true to-day as then. The poor victim of Blood Disease is drugged with Mercury to cure the malady and then dosed with Iodides to cure him of the Mercurial Poisoning; but instead of relief, the first one breaks down his general health and makes him a cripple, and the other ruins his digestive organs. To those afflicted in this way Swift's Specific is the greatest boon on earth, and is worth more than its weight in gold. It antidotes this Mercurial Poison, tones up the system and brings the sufferer back to health and happiness. Every person who has ever been salivated, should by all means take a thorough course of this remedy.

JEFFERSONVILLE, TWIGGS Co., Ga.

Five years ago I found on my plantation a colored man who was badly diseased. He stated that five years before he had contracted a violent case of blood poison, and had been treated by many physicians all failing to cure him. I treated him with Swift's Specific, and in a short time he was sound and well, and has not had a symptom of the disease since, D. M. HUGHES.

One gentleman who had been confined to his bed six weeks with Mercurial Rheumatism has been cured entirely, and speaks in the highest praise of S. S. S. CHILES & BERRY, Chattanooga, Tenn.
