Leafless Trees.

There are forests of leafless trees in some parts of Australia. They respire, so to speak, through a little stem, apparently answering the purpose of a leaf. The tree is known as "the leafless acacia."

Proud of Their Disfigurements.

A commander in the navy, who is now cruising with the South Atlantic squadron, sent home to his Philadelphia wife the other day a description of the women of Montevideo. "These women," he wrote, "are as unattractive as clods of earth. They are swarthy, angular, dull of eye and stolid of countenance. But what I wish particularly to tell you of is the moles upon their faces. Not one in twenty but has, on her cheek or lip or temple, a mole covered with long hairs. They are proud of these moles and regard them as beauty spots. It is said, indeed, that those girls who are moleless will resort to strange expedients in order to raise the ugly little growths upon their faces. The women of Montevideo twirl the long hairs upon their moles proudly, as a cavalryman twirls the ends of his mustache."
