SQUILLS.

Mr. Squills has been Running for Office and Got Left.

When I got home last night, said Squills, the old lady was up waiting for me. I knew there was something in soak. There always is when she sits propped up in bed reading, and I know it.

I wasn't feeling pretty good, said Squills, for I had been whitewashed in the convention, sold out body, boots, and breeches, and felt like a board yard he cat with his back hair curled the wrong side up.

"Have you got the nomination Squills, dear?"

I knew she had seen the evening paper, but I said "No, love," as mildly as if conventions and all such snares were beneath my notice.

"Not got the nomination, Mr. Squills?"

"No, Mrs. Squills, not that the court is aware of at this present writing. Certainly not."

"Then what do you expect to get for all the whisky you've been pouring down those fellow's throats?"

"What fellow's throats?"

"Your friends who have been tramping in and out of my house, Mr. Squills, and borrowing your poor children's money, and running you into all kinds of disreputable places to hunt up votes, and sneaking you off into the country to barbecues and other infamous resorts, paying for buggies, and making ridiculous remarks which I know you paid the reporters to work up into a speech. A nice thing you have done for yourself and me and the poor children, and then, after all, not to get anything for your pains. I'm ashamed of you, Mr. Squills. If I could afford a blush for so wretched a being, Squills, I would blush for you, but I can't, and, what's more, I won't. Don't tell me, Squills, that you don't wan't me to blush for you, and you sitting there just as mad as a hatfull of hornets. After you telling me, too, and the dear child, that she should have a new silk when you got the nomination. A nice nomination you've got, and those fellows who took your money and your whisky just laughing at you and thinking what a fool you are for believing them. That's what hurts me in the tenderest point, Squills."

"About this time," said Squills, "I put out the light, tumbled into bed, and prepared to go to sleep, but Mrs. Squills still kept at it with forty-Squills power."

After a time exhausted nature gave way, and she was silent. Then I felta singular jiggling of the bed, and I turned round and said, "Mrs. Squills, is that you? What in the world are you doing that for? If you want to laugh, laugh, but don't shake as if you had the buck-ague."

"Oh, what a politician you are, Squills," said she. "Two weeks canvassing, and then to be skunked by a tadpole'"

"To keep peace in the family," said Squills, "I had to promise that dress, or something else, and as for the tadpole business, what can you explain to a woman?"

Love on the Yellowstone.

One of Gallatin's fair daughters, while returning from Wonderland, stopped with her companions at a Yellowstone ranche. They had been there scarcely an hour when one of the proprietors gained the ear of our heroine and informed her that near by was one of the finest, largest, best and most skunkum raspberry patches he ever saw or heard tell of. "Why they could just scoop them up," etc. He urged upon her the necessity of the berries being plucked immediately, as they were dead ripe, millions of them. She was delighted at the prospect of going for the berries, but when she ascertained that our hero was bent on acting as guide, then her ardor became dampened. However, they started.

We bid adieu to any further description of this novel love scene, as now follows the conversation in which a mountaineer wooed a former city belle, whom two hours before he had never seen, showing the absurdity of the old "faint heart" and "fair lady" business.

"Say, do you see them fences?"

"Oh yes; they are nice fences."

"Well, them fences is ourn."

"Whose?"

"My Pard's and mine—half is mine and half is his'n, and those fields is ourn, too, and the house and stock and chickens and mortgage, and all on the ranch is ourn—half is mine and half is his'n."

"Ah, indeed!"

"Yes—and you don't know how much we got in the bank besides, and if I was to get a wife you bet I'd get more than half. And I suppose you don't know that I am the best hunter and guide in the Rocky Mountains? Well, I am, and what is more, I have enough quartz to buy out all the postoffices in Montana, and pay for running them besides. Why, I have a fortune just in one mine alone. The boys tell me it's a brass mine, but it ain't brass it's gold, sure, and if it ain't that it's good quartz, anyhow, and—don't—don't you think I ought to get married?"

"Most assuredly I do. A young man possessing your wealth and good looks should not hesitate a moment about entering into matrimony. I am surprised to think you are still single. Are you?"

"Well, yes, I suppose so. But say, do you see them granaries? Well, I just have enough grain over yonder to last two years, and so you see I can stand off the grasshoppers one year anyhow. And you needn't be afraid of Injuns up here; they don't come this high up—and say, don't you want to marry me? There now."

"Oh, sir, why—why, this is so unexpected, you know, and besides I—I should deem it my duty, while thanking you for honoring me with your hand, to inform you that I am engaged to be married to a gentleman in the States. I regret that your affections are not bestowed upon some young lady who is heart free. Please do not refer to the subject again."

"Well, I wouldn't have done so now, only I heard as how you didn't talk pretty to nice got up Bozeman chap, and told him you didn't want to marry him nohow, and I supposed after that I stood a good show of catching you myself. And—and (raising his voice) there's the raspberry patch over there, and come to think of it—I don't think they are as thick now as they used to be."—Avant Courier (Montana.)

Fall Top Dressing.

Before the winter sets in for good it will be best to get out all the manure that can be spared for this purpose and spread it freely on the mowing lots as a top dressing. If the land is not too hilly or uneven there is no danger of waste while a good covering protects the roots of grass, mellows the surface and promotes the growth of the crop next year.

A top dressing may be applied to advantage late in the fall, or immediately after the crop is taken off, or in the spring just after the grass starts. In the latter case the rapid growth of the grass cover and protects it from the sun. But there is little or no loss by evaporation through the winter.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

Culture of Bulbs.

Bulb culture is one of the most beautiful departments of floriculture, and seems to be increasing rapidly of latter times, especially in the vicinity of cities. Last spring we saw larger and more beautiful beds of hyacinths, tulips, &c., than ever before. We insert from Mr. Dreer's bulb catalogue the following description:

"Bulbs belong to a particular division of the vegetable kingdom; they are all, with scarcely a single exception, very ornamental, and hence desirable for the very large size of their flower in proportion to the entire plant, and for the brilliancy of their colors. By far the greater number of bulbs flower in the spring, and produce their flower stems immediately after they begin to grow; and shortly after they have flowered they cease growing and remain dormant and without leaves during the remainder of the year; hence, almost all bulbs require to be planted in the autumn—a fact which most amateurs are apt to overlook, and frequently send their orders out of season. They require a free, dry and somewhat rich soil, into which the roots may penetrate freely. A bulb is essentially a bulb, and contains within itself the germs of the leaves and flowers which are to be produced the following season; thus, in one sense, they are of more easy culture than any other class of plants, because the germ being previously formed, and the nourishment being provided in the body of the bulb, it is only necessary to supply heat and moisture to cause them to develop; this is fully exemplified in the Hyacinth, Narcissus, Crocus, early Tulips, and some other bulbs, which can be flowered when placed over water in glasses or in wet moss. The Hyacinth is the especial favorite for forcing in glasses.

Shrinkage of Grain.

The writer had a quantity carefully measured and put up in sacks. It remained in a cool barn in this way for three months. When the sacks were first filled the mouths could be scarcely tied, they were so full. At the end of three months there was apparently room for more. For curiosity some of it was measured, and it was found two quarts per bushel had fallen away, which was a loss of about seven per cent. The place where the seed was kept was very unfavorable to waste. There was no heat or wind to dry it up, and it may be taken as the very lowest percentage of loss. Under other circumstances, the loss by saving six months may often reach as high as twenty per cent. These things should be considered by those who are inclined to hold on for a chance of a rise

Another consideration strikes us here. People often complain that they get short weight or measure. No doubt that this is too often the case; but it is likely that in some instances the difference is as much in shrinkage as in intention.—Ex.

Sheep as Renovators.

A secesh soldier, while fighting under Stonewall Jackson, in Virginia, saw the benefit of sheep raising to revive worn out land. Impoverished in the fight for slavery, he began with only ten ewe sheep, which he put in a small field near his house, that was full of briers, weeds and the grass in fence corners. He gave them daily a little meal or bran, salted them often, and sheltered them in the winter, when they had swamp hay and a few roots. In the spring he had thirteen fine lambs, worth more than he gave for the ewes, and he said the wool and the manure was worth more than the cost of the food. He plowed and planted the field to corn, and got over thirty bushels to the acre, while around the shed the yield was much larger. He now keeps sheep, and grows, without the aid of guano or phospate, fine crops of clover, corn, wheat and turnips.—Correspondence N. Y. Times.
