THE WAR ENDS AGAIN

A contingent of some 40,000 French troops has left Mayence and other German cities, where they have been stationed since 1918. It is now expected that the last French soldier will be taken from German soil by the end of June. Not only Germans but many other persons as well, will feel that the end of the Aillied occupation of the Rhine country is more nearly the real end of the war than any previous event that has been hailed as such.

The war ended on November 11, 1918, with the signing of the Armistice. It ended again when the Versailles Treaty was initialed. When the United States made its separate peace in 1922, the end had come again. The signature and ratification of the Locarno Pact in 1925 provided still another end of the war. And so on through the twelve years of restless peace that have followed the great conflict.

There is, of course, no satisfactory way of deciding just when the struggle really was over—the edge of hostilities was the most immediately important of all these steps toward peace. But all of the slow and halting agreements to end conflict and set up the machinery of a peaceful regime must figure in the real establishment of the peace. The war was many years brewing, although the actual outbreak occupied only a month. The peace will take as many years, if it is to be lasting, and will take a great deal of painstaking statesmanship.

It remains to be seen whether the growth of alliances and causes of friction will prove as rapid as the building of European solidarity. Unless disarmament proceeds faster than competitive tariffs, arbitration faster than chauvinism, international cooperation faster than self?sufficient nationalism, we will have no end of the world war, but instead a few fleeting years of armed peace between hostilities.

A Georgia preacher delivered a bitter sermon against liquor drinking in the town cemetery. No cause for complaint. By having a few extra graves dug he could tumble the victims in without ceremony.

—:o:—

The reason some men who get to Washington don't become great statesmen is because the bone that ought'a be in their backs is parked in the space where they ought'a have brains.

—:o:—

Georgia is promised a $12,000,000 tobacco crop this year, according to advice from Atlanta. No reason for anyone to get excited or enthusiastic when we contemplate the 20 per cent tobacco to become effective June 1st.
