Resume of Proceedings for the Past Month

County Commissioners Acquire Community Wood Lot—Purchase 22.67 Acres of Timber

During November the Cass county commissioners transacted considerable important business in addition to considering and allowing the usual number of claim bills.

One act of importance that was mentioned in the Journal at the time it was consumated was the purchase of all the timber located on 22.67 acres of land in Section 21-11-14, belonging to Arminda J. Graves, for the sum of $566.75. This will be used for providing fuel for recipients of relief, and a community wood cutting project established. Under this arrangement the board will discontinue paying for coal and work cutting and working up the timber will be provided for many of the able-bodied men of the community.

Application of Louis Naeve for an On and Off Sale beer license for his place of business located in Section 36-12-13 was approved.

Resolution requesting Department of Roads and Irrigation to construct or improve road No. 137 running south from Alvo to Highway 34 was passed, with county pledged to reimburse the state prior to award of a contract for such construction, for all expenditures incurred in making preliminary surveys, preparation of preliminary plans and other necessary expenses, and to secure title to all right-of-way necessary for and incidental to the construction of said road, all without cost to the state.

Sealed bids were received for the 1937 audit of the various county offices and contract for this work was awarded to Frost, Congdon & O'Hara of Omaha, at $225.00.

Balance of time at the various meetings was spent in consideration and allowance of claim bills, as follows:

CHAPTER XXXVII

Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds were seated on their front porch enjoying the cool, stimulating breeze and the golden sunset of a fading June day.

John puffed silently on his favorite briar. Mary, taking advantage of the last few moments of day light, replaced buttons on Jack's shirts and trousers.

"Time," she mused aloud, "is stealing our baby from us. I hate to see Jack grow up. Just think, John, in a few more years he'll be leaving us. First, to college, and then I suppose to a home of his own."

"Nonsense," said John, "It will be a . . . ."

His words were drowned by a series of wild, almost blood curdling yells which rent the quiet evening air. Jack, leading a band of young Indians, raced around the corner of the house and disappeared in the dusk down the street.

"Humph," said his father, as he regained his composure. "I wish time would hurry up. Right now, he gets on one's nerves. He's at the age now where he can't make enough noise himself so he collects half the kids in the neighborhood to help him. What in the world are they doing?"

"I don't know," sighed his wife, "whether that was Sherman's march to the sea or Custer's last stand. It was very effective, don't you think?"

"Very," replied her husband. "I imagine the neighbors got a real thrill out of it."

"Don't worry, dear, we have much to be thankful for," said Mary. "At least, he is normal and healthy. Dr. Hayes examined him today to be sure nothing was wrong with him before we sent him to summer camp.

"Didn't find anything wrong, did he?" asked John.

"No," replied his wife. "Tomorrow he gets a dental examination. I want to be sure his teeth are all right before he goes away."

The following day, Jack and his mother paid Dr. Young a visit. For the first time in the nine years that the dentist had been caring for Jack's teeth, he found some particles of tartar on them.

"That is a sure sign you are growing up, old timer," said Dr. Young. "Young children seldom have tartar. After a child reaches eleven years of age, we can expect it."

Of course, the deposits were very small and it took him but a short time to remove them with his scalers and other special instruments.

"Tartar," explained the dentist, "is a lime-like substance that comes from the saliva and is deposited on the teeth. When it is first deposited, the tartar is quite soft. If it is not removed in twenty-four to forthy-eight hours, it gets very hard and clings tightly to the teeth.

"But," protested Jack, "I brush my teeth twice a day. Shouldn't that keep the tartar away?"

"Not entirely," replied the dentist. "In spite of careful brushing, tartar will accumulate on some people's teeth. I believe one reason is that we don't always reach every tooth surface with the toothbrush. It is on those surfaces not reached by the brush that the tartar collects. That is why it is so necessary to have your teeth cleaned by the dentist at least twice a year. He can, with his special instruments, clean the surfaces that you miss.

"If tartar is allowed to remain for any great length of time about the necks of the teeth, it will injjure the gums. The flintlike edges of the tartar may cut the gums and make them bleed. Sometimes, the tartar deposits become so heavy that they may push the gums away from the roots of the teeth, and in time they may cause pyorrhea."

SOVIET SETS UP MODEL INDUSTRY

MOSCOW (UP)—The Soviet commissariat of heavy industry, most important in the socialist industrial system, has been completely reorganized to coordinate its activities and serve as a model for the reorganization of other commissariats.

The plan of reorganization, submitted by Commissar L. M. Kaganovich, was approved by the Council of Peoples Commissars and has become effective.

Until recently work of the commissariat had been based on division of work by function. For instance, the chief administration of metallurgical industry was divided into a number of departments, such as the department of blast furnaces, department of rolled metals, etc., each of which guided its own work but was not coordinated as a complete enterprise.

Now "engineer-dispatchers" will control a complete enterprise, and technical departments work out technical problems and measures for better utilization of equipment. Another department at each enterprise will control labor turnover, wages, labor productivity and development of the Stakhanovite movement.

To facilitate the changes, the former 15 trusts in the commissariat were divided into 33 chief administrations, in each of which production and distribution departments were established governing the work of all enterprises in a given territory.
