Refreshing Pear Dessert For Thanksgiving Dinner

Why not put this refreshing pear dessert on your Thanksgiving menu if you prefer to end this sumptious feast on a light note. Guests will appreciate your thoughtfulness, Joe Sivesind, local salesman of the Meadow Gold Dairy assures us.

It is a simple dessert made to order for the busy cook. Prepare the egg nog sauce topping a day ahead, advises Beatrice Co., director of the firm's test kitchens in Chicago, and get bakery cake slices and the canned pears ready early in the day.

Pear Dessert with Egg Nog Sauce
(Six servings)

2 tablespions sugar
3 tablespoons cornstarch
¼ teaspoon salt
2 cups eggnog
1 egg, lightly beaten
1 tablespoon butter
1 tablespoon lemon juice
Angel food, sponge or pound cake slices
6 pear halves, tinted green
Maraschino cherries.

Combine sugar, cornstarch, and salt in saucepan. Stir in ½ cup egg nog to make a smooth paste. Stir in remaining egg nog. Cook over medium heat until smooth and thickened, stirring constantly. Remove from heat. Beat a small amount of egg nog mixture into egg. Add to remaining mixture and cook over low heat for 3 minutes, stirring constantly. Add butter and lemon juice, stir until well mixed. Chill thoroughly. Toast cake slices quickly under broiler. Cut slices in half diagonally and arrange on dessert plates. Place a pear half on each. Spoon egg nog sauce over pear. Garnish with marachino cherries.

BORON to power new ICBM's?

Missile experts say gigantic new ICBM's like the Titan may be the beginning step for extended manned satellite stations or manned flight around the moon and back to earth. Future rockets like the Titan, carrying men into space or atomic warheads across seas, will use power of high-performance fuels like boron.
