The King of Spain attended the wedding of a bricklayer to a peasant girl. And this is touted as an example of Alfonso's genuine democracy. It doesn't prove anything of the sort to us, however. DEFIANCE

It is not to be supposed that Col William Mitchell's denunciation of the American army and navy departments will be permitted to go unchallenged or that disciplinary measures will be omitted. Indeed, Col. Mitchell stated his own confidence that he will be punished. Such sweeping charges and such vehement language by an army official are almost if not quite unprecedented, and it is impossible for them to be overlooked.

Nevertheless the charges are being investigated with impartial thoroughness. If it is found that they are in any large degree justified there will be universal denunciation of the policies which Mitchell attacks. Discipline is discipline, and the Mitchell pronouncement is ruinous to the morale of the navy department and the war department. For this reason something will be done about the matter. Already Col. Mitchell has been punished for venturing to disagree with his supervisors, and many Americans believe that in this disagreement Col. Mitchell had all the best of the argument.

A separate department of aeronautics that is wholly divorced from either army or navy control seems to meet the requirements of common sense. No one doubts the immense importance of an effective air force in the scheme of national defense, and it stands to reason that an air force can be made more effective by being placed under separate control. So far the public follows Col. Mitchell, and so far the public sympathizes with Mitchell in the controversy and inclines to resent the punishment which has been meted out to him.

The succession of failures, tragic and costly, naturally tend to convince the people of the United States that something is radically wrong with the present aviation administration. Why was the near tragic flight to Hawaii undertaken. Is Col. Mitchell correct in his statement that the stationing of ships at intervals of 200 miles was altogether inadequate to provide for the safety of the flyers in such an unprecedented undertaking? And why was the Shenandoah sent out through a district known to be hazardous at this season of the year? Were fourteen lives sacrificed because the government had taken extraordinary precautions to save the priceless helium? These are questions which cannot be answered by the whitewash method. They must be answered in a way to satisfy the layman or aviation may be established under a separate department such as demanded by Col. Mitchell.

Meanwhile, however, Mitchell himself is in for a hot time. He is well aware of the difficulties in store for him, but he is a fighting man who is not afraid to face the music. We may deplore such a ghastly breach of discipline as that of which the colonel has been guilty, but we shall deplore even more vehemently any punishment which is not based on justice or which has the slightest aspect of vindictiveness. If Col. Mitchell is compelled to face a court martial the aeronautic division of the United States army will itself be on trial, and the verdict will mean as much for the department of war as it will for Mitchell himself. Of Mitchell's earnestness there is not a shadow of a doubt. No man invites "martyrdom" or the loss of his chosen life career without a sincere conviction that he is fighting for the right.

THE EXTRA JOB

It is possible that in your work-a-day life it is necessary for you to do many things which you consider "beneath your dignity."

Sometimes you wonder why the boss selects you for certain menial jobs which might be done by a cheaper man.

At times you feel like rebelling—perhaps even quitting—because you feel that not enough value is placed on your work.

Don't let such a foolish idea get away with you.

If you really are a big man, you are big whatever you do.

If the boss pays for your service, he knows where he needs the kind of service you can give.

Perhaps you have worked with men who were continually asserting to their associates that they would not let any boss make a "pack-horse" out of them.

And also you have noticed that these same men are continually out of a job and looking for another.

Naturally a man wants to fill the job for which he was hired, but if an employe is unwilling to fill another place in a temporary capacity, he is not a good employe.

WAR SCARS HEAL FASTER

In 1891 a monument was erected on Martha's Vineyard, Mass., in honor of the Island's soldiers of the Union army. According to the Boston Transcript, the patriotic societies of Martha's Vineyard, including the American army of the republic as well as the American Legion will now affix to this monument a tablet bearing the following inscription:

The Chase Is Closed.
In Memory of the Restored Union
This Tablet is Dedicated
By Veterans of
Henry Clay Wade Post, 201, G. A. R.
In Honor of
The Confederate Soldiers

This, according to the Transcript, is the first memorial of its kind "ever raised in the states of the North." It was a long time coming for the war of secession ended sixty years ago. The scars of war seem to heal faster now than in former times, and men show a much greater readiness to forget. The World war ended only seven years ago, and yet there seems to be very little hard feeling toward the Germans left in this country, or even in England, though for obvious reasons it still lingers in France. It is a remarkable fact that anti-southern literature was popular in the north for a generation, whereas anti-German literature was frowned upon within a year of the World war's end. The presence of a large population of German extraction is not by itself sufficient to account for this marked difference.
