Bragdon, the composer, was working on his symphonic poem when the baby's lusty cry was heard from the nursery Bragdon bore it manfully for five minutes, expecting baby's mother to come to the rescue. Then he opened the door and shouted upstairs:

"What is the matter? Harry, are you teasing the baby?".

"No, papa." "You must be doing something to make him cry."

"No. papa-truly! All Ethel and I did was to try to sing him to sleep with your lullaby."
