Gump Is Rapped at Legion Meeting

Kilmartin Castigates Congressman-Elect for Donating to Soldiers' Organization.

Speaking in the council chambers of the city hall before the members of the Douglas county post of the American Legion, John Kilmartin denounced the practice of some public men, especially newly elected candidates, for attempting to influence the good will of the legion by financial contributions.

"I refer," said Mr. Kilmartin, "to Congressman Andrew Gump."

Soon after the meeting was opened a ritual of initiation was adopted and the members were asked to canvass prominent society women for contributions to the Salvation Army drive in the effort to build a girls' hotel.

The names of all candidates for the election, to take place the first week in December, are to appear for two successive weeks in the Legionnaire, official newspaper of the Douglas county post.

An appeal from the Omaha Chamber of Commerce that the local post of the Legion pass favorable resolutions on the ship subsidy bill was read. The resolutions were voted down.

Rev. L. B. Holsapple, chaplain, asked that all serviceable clothing be collected in preparation for the cold weather, which will find many ex-service men in want. He also asked for volunteers who would provide dinners for Thanksgiving day or donate money.

The surplus money will be held for the Christmas fund.

A motion to enjoin German opera singers, who are soon to tour the United States, from singing in Omaha was referred to the Americanization committee.

Bodies of Ship Wreck Victims Floating in Sea

Mexicali, Lower California, Nov. 22.—Bodies of victims of the capsizing of the steamer Topolobampo early Sunday morning at La Bomba, 60 miles south of Mexicali, are drifting down the gulf of California, many miles from the scene of the disaster, according to reports received here tonight.

Latest estimates of the drowned indicate the total will remain above 80, with little probability the exact number ever will be learned.

No more survivors are believed to be lost in the desert along the gulf coast, an airplane search of both the Lower California and the Sonora shores failing to reveal any further signs of such refugees.

RADIO

English Radio Exchange.

What is said to be the first radiophone exchange in the world was recently opened at Croyden, England, the point from which the air lines to the European continent take their departure, according to Consul Linnell.

The chief use made of this exchange is to connect the serial-traffic controller, who has his headquarters in a control tower at Charing Cross, London, with the pilots of the air express flying between Croyden and the continent.

This wireless exchange can also connect the phones of the airships and airplanes while in flight with any office at the aerodrome at Croyden, making direct telephone conversation possible.

The pilot of each aeriel transport is now required to report his position to the traffic controller every fifteen minutes, so that the progress and position of each plane is known througout its journey. The controller is of particular value in directing the course of the air craft in cases of fog, and in giving them special directions for landing.

An advance in the technique of broadcasting may be looked for as the result of a new type of microphone—the instrument responsible for converting speech or music into electrical form. The drum of the microphone is fitted with a coil which vibrates in sympathy with it, and being placed in a strong magnetic field, the vibrations create electric impulses which are carried by radio in the usual way. The voice currents are stated to be remarkably true, and the reproduction of music highly successful.

There are so many cheap vacuum tube sockets on the market now that after a little use the contact points soon lose their tension, making a poor contact with the points on the vacuum tube and causing poor reception. This can be remedied by taking a hairpin and putting the bent end under the contact points so as to pull it up to its respective position. This is more successful than trying to pull it up with the fingers. When one contact point is pulled up with the fingers the one opposite is bent down by the first joint on the finger.
