Nutria Escape In Nebraska

The accidental release near Norfolk of 70 nutria, a South American furbearer generally considered an undesirable import, has Nebraksa Game Commission officials somewhat concerned. Nutria are active competitors of the native muskrat, both for food and on the commercial fur market.

The nutria, sent from California to Gerald Bossard of Norfolk, had been secured in pens in Lehman's lake, two miles south of Norfolk. Seventy escaped and only 12 were immediately recovered. Eight others were either shot or trapped and there have been unconfirmed reports that several others were also trapped. But Gordon Heebner, district game supervisor assigned to look into the situation, has reported that at least 46 nutria are not accounted for.
