Turbulent Murder Trial in 'Fever In the Blood'

A sensational and gripping murder trial in the midst of a bitterly fought political contest provides the screen with high-voltage entertainment in Warner Bros.' "A Fever in the Blood."

It plays Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, April 9-11, at Cass Theater here.

Headlining an all-star cast that literally runs from A-to-Z —Ameche to Zimbalist, the frank and provocative screenplay details the tangled love lives and the turbulent passions that obscure the usual political issues in the rough-and-tumble intra-party struggle of three men for the gubernatorial nomination.

Efrem Zimbalist, Jr., Angie Dickinson, Jack Kelly and Don Ameche are top-billed in the Roy Huggins production which also stars Ray Danton, Herbert Marshall and Andra Martin. Director Vincent Sherman drew his stars from stage (Ameche), screen (Dickinson, Marshall, Danton) and television (Zimbalist, Kelly).

Zimbalist, who zoomed to stardom in Warner Bros.' "77 Sunset Strip" TV series as a private detective, switches to dignified judicial robes as an idealistic judge begin grooming for the governorship.

Kelly, who similarly scored on TV as Bart in "Maverick," stars as the district attorney whose career has been sponsored by Zimbalist but whose ambition goads him into running against him with a flamboyant rosecution of the accused murderer in the sensational trial conducted in Zimbalist's court. —Adv.
