THE PLEASURES OF A MERCHANT

The following paper, which was read by S A Stinson, merchant at this place, at the big Shenkberg show in Sioux City last Thursday, was so well spoken of by those who heard it that we herewith publish it:

Pleasure comes to the person who is willing to work in the field to which his inclinations have been called. There never has been a time during all the past ages of civilization, nor has it been discovered to this day, when any Royal road leads us continually in paths of pleasantness and peace. If such a thing as that could be possible, all the powers of man, intellectually, physically, morally and spiritually would dwindle and decay. It is that bold rush for existence that makes our people what they are, and in no business is competition stronger than in the mercantile world. It is that we find as many failures in the professions and amongst the farmers as we do among the merchants. I believe a man may truly be called a failure who does not make advancements in his line of business so that the general public is benefited. Of course, it is not expected that a person will continually advance without reverses in business, but a continual standstill from year to year shows negligence and a want of ambition to do something in the world.

The pleasures which crown our pathway through life must come along in our every day work. The man who expects to labor a lifetime or until he accumulates a fortune and then sit down and take enjoyment, will never realize on his investment, but the per cent of pleasure which a legitimate business should pay. The man of the hour who wishes to have pleasure thrust around him must gather it day by day and must show a system of honesty in his business. Let a man have the reputation of being fair and upright in his dealings and he will possess the confidence of all who know him. Without these qualities every other merit will prove unavailing. Ask concerning a man, "Is he active and capable?" Yes. Industrious, temperate and regular in his habits? Yes. Is he honest? Is he Trustworthy? Why, as to that, I am sorry to say that he is not to be trusted; he wants watching; he is a little tricky; and will take an undue advantage if he can. Then I will have nothing to do with him will be the inevitable reply. Part with anything rather than your integrity, and the pleasure that is afforded by this mode of living will amply repay you. Some there are who are callous as to this. Some there are who, in stooping to mercantile dishonesty, in driving the immoral bargain, think they have done a clever action. You may be prosperous in your own eyes; you may have realized an envied fortune; you may have your automobile and servants; but rather a crust of bread with a good conscience than a stately palace without it.

We must admit as merchants that we have an innumerable train of hangers-on in the business, who pass along down the stream of mercantile activity with scarcely a bubble of enjoyment about them. They live well, and dress well as long as possible, living as they do upon the generosity of wholesalers and friends, and often pass on for years before justice overtakes them. So long as these persons can keep up fashionable appearances and elude the police, they are received into the company of the "Upper Tens." But sooner or later the deeper principles of right will prevail and justice will be meted out to them. This, of course, is just as prominent in every vocation in life; but the successful merchant who is striving to reap happiness will not take the advantage of his fellow man. The greatest men in business today are those who look after the little things carefully. Michael Angelo was one day explaining to a visitor at his studio what he had been doing to a statue since his previous visit. "I have retouched this part, polished that, softened this feature, brought out that muscle, given some expression to this lip and more energy to that limb." "But these are trifles," remarked the visitor. "It may be so," replied the sculptor, "but recollect that trifles make perfection, and perfection is no trifle."

Fellow merchants, we must improve every opportunity for our advancement, or failure will be written on our banner. Do you suppose that we can try one business and then another and thus while away our lives and make it a success? The secret of one's success or failure in nearly every enterprise is usually contained in the question, "How earnest is he?" The talent of success is simply doing what you can do well, and doing well whatever you do without a thought of fame. Be cheerful, for it is the only happy life. The times may be hard, but it will make them no easier to wear a gloomy and sad countenance. It is the sunshine and not the cloud that makes the flower. The sky is blue ten times where it is black once. You probably have troubles; so have others. None are free from them. Perhaps it is as well that none should be. They give sinew and tone to life—fortitude and courage to man. That would be a dull sea, and the sailor would never get ashore if there was nothing to disturb the surface of the ocean. It is the duty of everyone to extract all the happiness and enjoyment he can without and within him, and above all, he should look on the bright side of things. What though things do look a little dark. The lane will turn and end in broad daylight. Men were not made to hang down either heads or lips; and those who do only show they are departing from the paths of true common sense and right. Give us men who do not change with the wind, as do weather-cocks, but like the mountains who change the winds themselves. Do not live in hope with your arms folded; fortune smiles on those who roll up their sleeves and put their shoulders to the wheel.

What a departure from the field of wholesaling was launched when the C. Shenkberg company stepped aside from its old trodden paths and took into its confidence the retailer. Such a step as that was considered suicidal. When we stop and think what a step like that means it does not take a philosopher to tell us what the result will be. Whenever you show the people you are interested in them, then it is they stop for their labors for a time and ask, what you have to offer. What retailer is there that does not want his dollars to purchase as many goods as possible? None that I have heard of as yet. Why, then, is it a good thing? Because others are pulling for the same thing. More friends, more business, more dollars.

A great many persons who will look upon this project in the future will consider it luck; but my friends, it is pluck which weaves the web of success. It is not luck, but pluck, that turns the wheel of fortune. It is pluck that amasses wealth, that crowns men with honors, that forges the luxuries of life. It is this thought I would impress on you that in order to gain enjoyment you must be vigilant and brave; and when you have done your work as best you could, it may be said of you as Longfellow has put it—

His was the troubled life,
The conflict and the pain,
The grief, the bitterness of strife,
The honor without stain.
So when a great man dies,
For years beyond our ken,
The light he leaves behind him
Upon the paths of men.
