Two Great Leaders.

Disraell wit was too much for Gladstone. The great Liberal had but one adjective for his Tory opponent, and that was "deviltah." Never during the years of their opposing leadership had the two any social relations. Each made light of the other's literary efforts. Some oue asked Lord Beaconsfield to define the difference between a misfortune and a calamity, and unhesitatingly it came. "If Mr. Gladstone should fall into the Thames, it would be a misfortune. If any one should pull him out, it would be a calamity."

The best of all the Gladstone-Disraeli stories tells how once at a London dinner party the ladies at the table were asked which they would marry if they had to marry one or the other, the great Liberal or the great Tory. All declared promptly in favor of Beaconsfield save one, who hastened to explain that she had rather wed Gladstone that she might clope with Disraeli and so break her husband's heart. This happening was of course retold to Disraell, and so pleased was he over it that he suspended a cabinet debate on the chances of a continental war in order to relate it .- Warwick James Price in Criterion.

All sorts of devices have been used to mark a line of march. A unique method of "blazing the trail" is still to be seen in Africa, and a recent publication prints a picture of one of these memorials of the dervich raid. Arthur J. Hayes mentions the subject in his "Source of the Blue Nile."

correspondent, "Englishmen always seem to put all they possibly can into an address." Well, the address of an Englishman is a very important thing, almost as important as his pedigree. A good address, especially in London, is more highly regarded than square meals, the latter often being sacrificed for the former. This great truth has been recognized by a woman who wrote to an Australian newspaper: "There are only certain parts London in which one can live and be recognized. It is divided into districts, the most important of which bears the address London, W.

"Why do they go? Naturally the cheap and fertile land of Western Canada attracts them. Each emigrant goes with a reasonable expectation of bettering his fortune. Indeed in a few years he may grow rich through the abundant crops he can raise and the Increase of land values. But perhaps that is not the sole reason for the as tonishing migration. There is a common notion abroad that in Canada life and property are appreciably safer than they are here. Murders are not so frequent, and are more speedily and surely punished. Mobs and the socalled 'unwritten law' are virtually unknown in Canada. Again, the law is a vastly more ascertainable entity there. Canada does not permit Its judges to veto acts of a legislative body. When a statute has been enacted it is known to be the law of the land until it is repealed. This naturally imparts to Canadian civilization a security and stability which we have not yet attained.

"We must remember, in the same connection, that the Canadian protective tariff is far less exorbitant than ours, and much less boldly arranged for the benefit of special favorites, Hence there is an impression, very widely diffused, that the Canadians are not so wickedly robbed by the trustas we are in this country. Reasons like these sufficiently account for the exodus of a body of citizens, whom we can ill afford to lose, but they do not much assuage our regret that they cannot be retained in the United States."

Speaking of this, a Canadian Government representative says that the Americans who cross the border are most welcome. The splendid areas of virgin soll, a large quantity of which is given away as free homesteads, He close to existing railways and to those under construction. The railway lines that are assisting in this development are the Canadian Pacific, the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pa cific. The latter is built entirely on Canadian soil, and has opened up a wonderful stretch of land. Along this line during the year about closed thousands of American settlers have made their homes. They have built the towns, and immediately began as factors in the building up of the great Canadian West.
