A STRANGE DUEL.

Two Mexicans Fight a Hundred Tarantulas in a Dark Room.

New York World: Particulars of a strange duel have just leaked out in Toledo, O., through the arrival from Mexico of W. C. Martine, a wealthy coffee merchant. He says the participants in the duel were Senor Victoria, a mining speculator, and Senor Pedraza, an extensive ship owner. It took place at Tampico, Mexico, and he gives the following account of the affair, his information coming through A. A. Terrence, a coffee-buyer at Tampico:

"Senor Victoria and Senor Pedraza a few weeks ago met at a ball given at Tampico by one of the chief ladies of the Spanish society. The gentlemen, while heated with wine, quarreled in the presence of the lady, whom both admired. Senor Victoria challenged Senor Pedraza, who accepted the challenge and stipulated that the duel must take place in a dark room. As Pedraza had the choice of weapons he demanded that Victoria meet him in the room where should be placed a hundred tarantulas of the most poisonous kind, and that each should devote his energies to killing the tarantulas instead of fighting his opponent, and neither must leave the room until all the poisonous spiders were killed.

"Pedraza, it is thought, expected that Victoria would never accept the weapons, but Victoria did not back down, and the duel took place. It was fought in a room as dark as a dungeon. There were no seconds, and no one at Tampico suspected the truth. When the doors were broken open both men were found on the floor, dead, surrounded by the horrible spiders, some dead and some still alive. In spite of the efforts of friends to hush it up, the truth leaked out. An investigation was promised, but friends interfered and nothing was done about the duel."

"A Word to the Wise is Sufficient.

"Catarrh is not simply an inconvenience, unpleasant to the sufferer and disgusting to others—it is an advanced outpost of approaching disease of worse type. Do not neglect its warning; it brings deadly evils in its train. Before it is too late use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. It reaches the seat of the ailment, and is the only thing that will. You may dose yourself with quack medicines 'til it is too late—'til the streamlet becomes a resistless torrent. It is the matured invention of a scientific physician. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

Pasteur and His Dogs.

The Figaro publishes the following biographical details of M. Pasteur, whose well known name is again more frequently than usual quoted since the "dog days" of August have arrived: "M. Louis Pasteur was born at Dole-du-Jura on December 22, 1822. His father, who had been in the army, had a tanyard at Arbois, and his highest ambition was that one day his son might become a teacher at the Arbois college. When his son was first admitted as a pupil to the college, he, the smallest of the boys, was so proud of being a student, that he arrived burdened with a load of heavy dictionaries of which he had no need at all. Up to the age of thirteen, however, he often deserted the school and went fishing or sketching. At the age of eighteen he became a pupil at the Besancon college, where he began his studies every morning at 4 o'clock. In 1843 M. L. Pasteur entered the normal school of which he afterwards became a prominent professor. Some of the most eminent French chemists were his instructors, and the student's enthusiasm for chemistry grew from day to day. He spent his Sundays with Barruel, M. J. B. Dumas's assistant; and there is yet to be seen at the Normal school a phial containing sixty grammes of phosphore obtained with the help of some bones which Pasteur had brought from a butcher, and after burning them and submitting them to various tests from 4 a.m. to 9 p.m., reduced them to the weight of sixty grammes. Late at night, when he went to bed, he murmured, 'Seven hours to wait before I can return to the laboratory.' After having finished his studies M. Pasteur become the assistant of M. Ballard, and shortly after receiving a call to the Normal school he published his famous work on spontaneous regeneration, which made a great sensation in the scientific and philosophic world."

M. Pasteur's laboratory at the Normal school, Rue d'Ulm, Paris, is described by the Figaro as follows: "In one of the ante-rooms several monkeys are gamboling about, and receive the visitors with friendly grimaces. Through a passage ornamented with the celebrated Gambrinus song in a rich frame, which is the gift of the believers of the north, one arrives at the sanctuary, a large, well-lighted hall. In its center the master stands surrounded by alembics, phials, and other vessels, looking through his enormous budget of letters from all parts In round latticed cages dogs of different races are locked up. One is in the last stage of rabies; his bark sounds abnormal; his hoarse cries are not unlike the crow of a cock. The noise frightens the rest of the dogs, which rush into the furthest corner of the cage if one approaches the door. If you knock with your foot against the cage the diseased dog runs furiously about and tries to bite the lattice-work. The end of an iron bar is held out to him, and he seizes it at once with his teeth, and will not let it go again even if the iron has been heated. The animal refuses to take the food which is regularly offered to it, but it attacks with avidity the hay which serves as its bed, pieces of wood, and other things, and devours them without masticating them. Further on a cock crows triumphantly, hares, pigs, monkeys submit with varying docility to the inocculations, and all these creatures share the same fate. With regard to the dogs, M. Pasteur says: "These animals are suffering without doubt; it is a law of nature. It is necessary that a few should have to suffer for the sake of the whole community. If I make them suffer, it is in order to save them and to aid human beings. * * I would never have the courage of killing a bird for the sake of sport, but when it is a case of making experiments I have no scruples at all."

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, and often leads to self-destruction. We know of no remedy for dyspepsia more successful than Hood's Sarsaparilla. It acts gently, yet surely and efficiently, tones the stomach and other organs, removes the faint feeling, creates a good appetite, cures headache and refreshes the burdened mind. Give Hood's Sarsaparilla a fair trial. It will do you good

The Kimberley Gold Fields.

San Francisco Call: From Perth we learn that on June 20th Sergeant Sherry, in charge of the gold escort, reports that on May 5th the prospects of the Kimberley gold fields were still very good. The newly discovered reefs exceed expectation, and the miners on the field are most sanguine. Twelve reefs have been registered. Plenty more will be registered when machinery arrives. There are quite five hundred persons on the field, all of whom are making a livlihood. The gold field is becoming more extended every week. It is one hundred miles from the Lower Panton workings of Mount Dockerell. Gold has also been found twenty miles further in the same direction. Jackson's reef has been struck in several places for upwards of a mile from the main shaft, showing better results than have hitherto been procured. An excellent reef has been found at Mount Dockerell, yielding unsurpassed specimens.

A LOSING GAME.

LIVELY CHAT WITH A WORKINGMAN IN MINNEAPOLIS.

What He Said in Regard to Something Which Troubled Him for a Long Time and How He Got Rid of It.

"All right," said a bright, ruddy-faced young man with a clear voice. He was dressed as a workingman, and stood in front of the new house of Zimmerman, the miller on Sixth avenue, above Eighteenth street, Minneapolis. He had for a moment put aside his carpenter's tools. The speaker was William H. Heskoth, 1812 Fifth avenue, S., Minneapolis.

"All right," Mr. Heskoth continued, "of course. Don't you see I am able to do my day's work with any of them? I don't think I was ever better in my life than I am just at the present time."

"I heard that you were in a bad way."

"Well I had to give up work, and I was losing my strength pretty fast. A little over a month ago I [illegible] cold and settled in my throat and lungs. My throat got so sore that I could hardly eat any thing [illegible] coughed [illegible] phlegm [illegible] down the back part of my throat. I went to two or three doctors. One of them tried to clear my throat [illegible] They tried various remedies on me, but I got worse [illegible] became [illegible] almost [illegible] papers [illegible] pronounced incurable [illegible] my catarrh had become chronic, and that I might [illegible] went [illegible] month [illegible] strength [illegible] no more pain in my head or lungs. My breathing [illegible] and [illegible] uneasy feeling, and I am able to eat as hearty as usual and do as good a day's work as any man in town, and I consider myself completely cured."

SNEEZING CATARRH.

What It Means, How It Acts and What It Is.

You sneeze when you get up in the morning, you try to sneeze your nose off every time you are exposed to the least draft of air. You have a fullness over the front of the forehead, and the nose feels as though there was a plug in each nostril which you cannot dislodge. You blow your nose until your ears crack, but it don't do any good, and the only result is that you succeed in getting up a very red nose, and you so irritate the lining membrane of that organ that you are unable to breathe through it at all. This is a correct and not overdrawn picture of an acute attack of catarrh, or "Sneezing Catarrh" as it is called.

Now, what does this condition indicate? First, a cold that causes mucus to be poured out by the glands in the nose; then those diseased glands are attacked by swarms of little germs—the catarrh germ—that floats in the air in a locality where the disease is prevalent. These animalculae, in their efforts to find a lodgment, irritate the sensitive membrane lining the nose, and nature undertakes to rid herself of them by producing a fit of sneezing.

When the nose becomes filled with thickened and diseased mucus the natural channels for the introduction of air into the lungs is interfered with, and the person so effected must breathe through the mouth, and by such means the throat becomes parched and dry, snoring is produced, and then the catarrhal disease gains ready access to the throat and lungs.

PALPABLE SIGNS.

By Which a Presence Undesirable is Made Known.

When catarrh has existed in the head and upper part of the throat for any length of time—the patient living in a district where people are subject to catarrhal affection—and the disease has been left uncured, the catarrh invariably sometimes slowly, extends down the windpipe and into the bronchial tubes, which tubes convey the air into different parts of the lungs. The tubes become affected from the swelling and the mucus arising from catarrh, and in some instances become so plugged up that the air cannot get in as freely as it should. Shortness of breath follows, and the patient breathes with labor and difficulty.

The pain which accompanies this condition is of a dull character, felt in the chest, behind the breast bone or under the shoulder blade. The pain may come and go—last a few days and then be absent for several others. The cough that occurs in the first stages of bronchial catarrh is dry, comes at intervals, is hacking in character, and usually most troublesome in the morning on arising or going to bed at night, and it may be the first evidence of the disease extending into the lungs.

Sometimes there are fits of coughing induced by the tough mucus—so violent as to cause vomiting.

A weak stomach and a dislike for food causes the patient to think he has a disease of the stomach, instead of the lungs.
