OMAHA LIVE STOCK.

Cattle.

Wednesday, May 23, 1888.

Forty-six loads made up the fresh receipts of cattle to-day, as against 127 on yesterday. The market did not open very active but a good many loads were sold before the close. The market was about 5c lower, unless it might be on the most desirable beef cattle, which in a few instances sold well up to yesterday's prices. The decline on common and inferior grades was even more than 5c in some cases.

Hogs.

There was another heavy run again to-day 144 fresh loads being on sale. Although the receipts were so heavy the hogs were about all sold before midday. The best heavy hogs sold about steady, while the other grades were about 5c lower. The market closed steady at the decline, with only ten loads remaining unsold.

Sheep.

There were no sheep here to make a market.

Jumped Nine Thousand Feet.

A Minneapolis (Minn.) dispatch on the 17th instant to the New York Times says: Prof. Baldwin, the aeronaut, who yesterday jumped from a balloon with a parachute at an elevation of 9,000 feet says: "Taken as a whole, it was the most successful jump I ever made—scientifically and every way." He got off well and the landing was very favorable. This was his tenth jump and was different from any of the others. "I looked at my barometer just before I jumped," he says, "and indicated about 9,000 feet. I could hardly realize that I had attained so great an altitude, but when I returned to the ground and found out how long it took me to make the ascension and the jump I was sure about the distance. I had about 200 pounds of ascension force on. I probably went skyward at the rate of about 3,000 feet per minute. The collapse of the balloon when I pulled the cord, just as I jumped, was more complete than ever before. The jerk of the parachute brought the balloon over on one side. The tear, or opening, was about ten feet long. Then the rush of the gas to the neck or opening was so great that it caused a total collapse, and the balloon shot down by me and reached the ground probably five minutes before I did. The parachute went the first 200 to 300 feet at a terrible rate of speed. Then it acted queerly, acted as it never did before. It seemed to inflate all right, and in an instant shut up again. I hardly know what my sensations were. It took but an instant, I should think, and then it filled all right. The wind seemed to rushed to the top at first. I experienced a sensation somethtng like seasickness. I was not very dizzy."

Invented in a Dream.

A recent issue of the Pittsburg (Pa.) Commercial Gazette says: An ice sled which is to be propelled by a traction wheel is the invention of a well known Pittsburg lawyer. It was the outgrowth of a dream. He imagined that he was skating, but instead of applying the motive power to his feet was propelling himself by a rotary motion of his hands and arms. He at once set about applying the idea thus gained, and with an arrangement of treaties and cranks attained the result. He claims that a speed of twenty-seven feet per second can be attained by his model, and by varying the size of the various wheels it could be greatly increased. His arrangement for guiding his sled and for checking or stopping it when in motion is also apparently perfect.
