George P. Dean enlisted as a private August 27, 1863, in Company H, Tenth Michigan cavalry. He was in active service continuously until the close of the war. He was at Blue mountain, Tennessee. In April, 1864, the regiment at Bean's station was ordered to destroy a railroad bridge over the Wautaga river at Carter's station. The bridge was defended by the rebel general "Mudwall" Jackson with a strong force, occupying a strong redoubt, with extensive and well constructed rifle pits. A brilliant charge was made, causing the enemy to give way in great disorder, taking shelter in a large saw mill near at hand. An attempt was made to drive the enemy out of the mill, but the charging force was met with such a terrible and destructive volley that it was abandoned. The fight was a brilliant success, though obtained at a loss of quite a large number, killed and wounded. Mr. Dean participated with his regiment in numerous skirmishes and battles thereafter, his regiment being actively engaged during the entire time. He was honorably discharged November 11, 1865.

N. H. Hurford enlisted in the 62d regiment Ohio veteran volunteers; went to the front in October, 1864; was at Winchester, Va., under Gen. Shields. He received a slight wound at Rice's Station which enables him to say that he has bled for his country.

H. K. Bevier enlisted at Dunkirk, N. Y., as private musician, September, 1862; was appointed drum major of the regiment. He afterwards became principal musician of the same regiment. He was at Williamsburg in the army of the Potomac from first to last. His was the third regiment of the excelsior brigade. He was in Hooker's division of the old Third corps until the consolidation was made with the second. His term expired while in front of Petersburg.

T. P. Cowee enlisted in company F, Thirty-sixth Ohio infantry, August , 1861, and re-enlisted February 14, 1864, and was discharged June 6, 1865. He was in sixteen hard fought battles and twenty-three skirmishes, second Bull Run, Antietam, South Mountain, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Mission Ridge and then returned to the Shenandoah valley; was with Hunter and took at Lynchburgh, and in the last Winchester fight. He was wounded at Berryville, near Harper's Ferry, September 18, 1864 and was never able to do duty after that time. He still carries a rebel bullet as a memento of the great struggle.

George F. Ryan enlisted as a private in company C, Sixtieth New York regiment, with which he served until the close of the war, having re-enlisted December 25, 1863. He participated in the battles of Chancellorsville, Antietam and Gettysburg. He was wounded May 26, 1864, in the engagement at New Hope Church, Ga., by a ball in the left leg. He enlisted as a private, but in the organization of his company he was elected a corporal, and was promoted to sergeant in November, 1862, because in the fall of 1862 orderly sergeant. He was commissioned first lieutenant December 19, 1864, from which time until his discharge he commanded his company in its captain being absent. His final discharge was issued July 17, 1865.

Rev. W. H. H. Pillsbury enlisted July 13, 1862 as a private in the Seventeenth Maine regiment of infantry. He served with his regiment until March of 1864, when he was discharged on account of physical disability. During the last six months of his service, he was engaged in the hospital as steward. He was in the battle of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg and Mine Run, and a number of skirmishes.

C. C. Dodson enlisted as a private in the Seventy-fourth regiment of Ohio infantry. He was commissioned as first lieutenant in January, 1865, acting as captain. He served in the army of the west under Major-General George Thomas Robertson and Major-General Stanley. He was engaged in eight principle battles, and marched from Nashville, Tenn., to Washington. He received two wounds in his first battle, participated in the grand review at the close of the war at Washington, and mustered out of service at Camp Dennison, Ohio, July 18, 1865.

David Ackerman enlisted at Easton, Penn., on February 20, 1865, in Company J, Twenty-Eighth Pennsylvania volunteer infantry, and joined the company at North Carolina. After Johnston's surrender at Greensboro, he was returned to Washington, taking part in the grand review, and was mustered out and discharged July 20, 1865 at Philadelphia.

Seth P. Mobly first enlisted as a private in the Eighteenth Iowa infantry in the spring of 1862, and was stationed with the regiment at Clinton, Iowa, but at general muster was excluded by Adjutant Baker on account of frailty of build and insufficient age, being under 17 and weighing less than 100 pounds.

He re-enlisted in November, of the same year, as a private in company B, Seventh Iowa cavalry, together with two brothers and his father, being all the male members of the family at that time. This time he passed final muster and served the three full years, being discharged in 1865. The early two years of his service was in the Indian campaigns in Nebraska, Dakota and Wyoming. In 1864, when General Price made his last raid through Missouri, Seth P. Mobly was on detached duty in the Cherokee Nation with Provost Marshal Heath looking after the thieves who were running off stock in the said nation, and when Price began his raid north the subject of this sketch was attached to the Fourth Kansas battery and served all through that campaign under General Curtis, being in all the engagements from Independence, Mo., to the Red river, which Price crossed completely whipped and crippled, most of his force being killed or captured, and with not a single piece of artillery left. Mr. Mobly has been a member of Lyon post since its organization August 29, 1877.

John M. Thayer, governor of Nebraska, began his military career in this state in 1855, when he raised a force of 150 men and went to the frontier to fight the troublesome Indians, being made the commander-in-chief of the territorial militia. The Indian troubles with the Pawnees were successfully subdued but four years later they broke out again and caused great trouble and annoyance and considerable loss of life, when, pursuant to authority from the government, General Thayer again raised a force of 194 men with which he followed the Pawnees and forced a complete and unconditional surrender. In the latter part of 1860, by the authority of the government, he raised the First regiment of Nebraska infantry, and early in 1861 was commissioned as colonel of said regiment which was ordered to St. Louis, then to Pilot Knob, Sedalia, then in the expedition to Springfield, Mo., when General John C. Fremont, subsequently at the head of his regiment, he went to Fort Henry and participated in the battles of Fort Donelson and Shiloh. He was then promoted to brigadier general, having had command of Wyman's brigade at the battles of Donelson and Shiloh. He went to Memphis and commanded a brigade of Iowa troops in the battle of Chickasaw Bayou, capturing 5,000 prisoners. He was all through the siege of Vicksburg, was appointed brigadier and brevet major general of volunteers for gallant and distinguished service. He participated in the capture of Jackson, Miss., under General Sherman. He was in the Army of Arkansas, under General Steele, and took a conspicuous part in the battles of Prairie de Anne, Moscow, Jenkin's Ferry and Saline River. Subsequently he was placed in command of the Army of the Frontier and was stationed at Fort Smith several months, when he successfully repulsed attacks by the forces of the rebel Generals Cooper and Maxley. He closed his military career in command at Helena, on the Mississippi, July, 1865, when he was brevetted major general. His horse was killed under him at Arkansas Post. He was known as a gallant and dashing officer and brave soldier, and a man of considerable genuine military genius, and was most favorably mentioned for bravery and gallantry by that greatest of all generals, Grant.

Lyon post No. 11, was organized August 29, 1877, with the following members: S. P. Mobley, W. M. Ogle, S. W. Smith, G. H. Bush, W. F. Fauts, S. D. Ronnel s, O. J. Riley, T. C. McCoy, Garrett Sezar, N. H. Hurford, W. H. Harrison, H. M. Burcher, C. B. Lewis, James Lewis, and D. A. Abbott. Giles H. Bush was elected commander, and George F. Ryan adjutant. But little interest was manifested by the members, and meetings were held irregularly until February, 1883, when under special orders from the department, the post was reorganized. New members were mustered in, and the affairs of the post received an impetus that has caused it to be one of the most prosperous posts in the department of Nebraska. There are now over two hundred members in good standing here.

The building in which the post meets is owned by the Grand Army of the Republic building association, is a two-story brick structure, well located and a credit to the city. It was built in 1885, and the property is now worth $20,000. The building is 44x80 feet, fronting Third street. There are two large store rooms on the first floor, with ante rooms, etc., occupy the second floor. It is well furnished, the interior presenting the finest appearance of any hall in the city.

Lyon post owns a cemetery of five acres west of Beatrice, lots in which can only be sold to members of the post.
