FRESH VEGETABLES SCARCE

Market Stalls Offer Slight Array for the Sunday Dinner.

NEW PEAS OFFERED AT FANCY PRICES

Appearance at This Time an Encouraging Sign, as it Indicates Plentiful Supply Within a Very Few Days.

There has been a scarcity of fresh vegetables this week and in consequence the local market has not the variety nor the quantity that might be expected at this time of year. Shipments from the south have commenced again, however, and a few more days promise to see the market up to standard again.

New peas were in the market Friday morning, but their development is scarcely sufficient to recommend them, especially at 15 cents a quart. The pods are small and flat, but their appearance at all is encouraging, for it marks the beginning. Wax beans are only 15 cents a quart this week and are better looking than they were. String beans are 15 and 20 cents a quart and are not plentiful. Asparagus is 25 cents a bunch and egg plant of exceptionally large size sells from 35 to 40 cents each. Water cress is 15 cents a box, rhubarb 10 cents a bunch. Green peppers are larger and much better and sell three for 25 cents. Cauliflower is 25 and 35 cents a head and cabbage 5 cents a pound. New beets, radishes, onions, turnips, parsnips, carrots and parsley are 5 cents a bunch. The larger new turnips are selling for 10 cents a dozen. New potatoes are very much larger and better and sell three pounds for 25 cents. Artichokes are 25 cents each. Old potatoes sell from 35 cents to $1 a bushel and sweet potatoes from 40 to 50 cents a bushel. They are fine and large and of good flavor.

Omaha received its first full carload of Florida celery this week and it is of exceptional quality, being superior to the California product. It retails at 10 cents a stalk. Head lettuce sells for 10 and 15 cents a head, but its quality makes up for the price. Leaf lettuce is 5 cents a head.

Only a few strawberries were in market Friday morning and they were not of the best quality. The berries were small and though of beautiful color, were not sweet. Oranges have gone up in price again, having raised 50 cents a box wholesale over last week's price. This brought the retail price up a little and the best sell for 40 and 50 cents a dozen. Lemons are 20 cents a dozen. Grape fruit looks decidedly better than it did a little while ago, but it is about gone, and the next will come from California. It sells for 10 and 12½ cents each, but the fruit is not as large as it was. All sorts of apples at almost as many different prices are in market. A good eating apple sells from 40 to 60 cents a peck and cooking apples for 25 and 30 cents a peck.

Several of the grocers have been making special prices on sugar of late, some selling as high as twenty-one pounds for $1. The average is seventeen and eighteen pounds for $1 and "C" sugar is the same price.

Eggs were 18 cents a dozen Friday morning, and only one grade, the best, is being quoted. Butter continues to bring 35 cents a pound for the package creamery and from 18 to 20 cents for the dairy, which is every bit as good in every respect.

Poultry is about the same as it has been. Chickens are 12 and 14 cents a pound, ducks 16 cents, geese 14 cents, capons 20 cents, and turkey 20 and 22 cents a pound. Broilers are 50 cents each and squabs from 25 to 50 cents each.

The offering of the fish market is very good. Lobsters are a little higher than they were and sell from 60 to 65 cents a pound. Roe shad are $1 and buck shad 60 cents each and weigh about three pounds. Catfish are 18 cents a pound, black bass 25 cents, fresh mackerel 18 cents, pike 15 cents and trout 15 cents a pound. Fresh cut fish steaks are 15 cents a pound.

LABELS TELL THE TRUTH

Frank Expressions Found on Canned Goods as Result of Food Law.

DECEPTION NOT POSSIBLE LONGER

Mrs. Providem May Easily Determine Just What She Is Buying and Can Make a Good Sunday Dinner from Left Overs.

Be sure and read the labels on your cans of fruit and vegetables. In talking about the working of the pure food law recently with a merchant he took down a can of petit pois from France and the last line of the label stated "colored with sulphite of copper," and so now we are officially informed that the dainty little French peas with their very natural color which we delighted to use when we desired something nice get that fine color from sulphite of copper, a poison! Not enough to poison us seriously with one dish, perhaps, but if often used to be an irritant to the digestive organs and in time to work serious injury. So if we want to have some specially fine peas to fill our timbale cases, or to serve with a crown roast, we must read the label and be sure they are not colored with sulphite of copper. We must also learn the lesson from this fact that the country which understands best the art of preparing delicate things for the table knows of no way to make the articles look like the fresh vegetable except to use mineral poisons, so we have learned that the process of cookery inevitably changes the color and must be content to sacrifice appearance to healthfulness and take our peas a little less green and beautiful.

Cream Becomes Milk.

Another can of a well known brand of "condensed cream" had pasted over the label at the lower corner a little extra slip covering the word cream with milk and adding "to conform to the pure food law." There's another piece of information for you, and to a degree those who demand certain things in foods are responsible for the fraud which is thus exposed and corrected. The eating world generally want cream, as much cream as possible, not even "top of the milk" will satisfy them, although it is doubly, perhaps trebly richer than the whole milk, because the cream being the lightest part of the milk begins to rise at once and gather in the milk at the top, so the manufacturers of condensed milk, to satisfy this demand at the price people were willing to pay, put in a little butter color and the condensation making it look thicker and more like cream in its pure state, and the color increasing the deception, they called it cream and the public readily accepted it. Now they have to state the exact contents and the result in this case is—milk—which is really healthier for us in most cases than cream, especially "cream" as "made up" for us by the trade.

Nowhere does the art of cookery appear to so great advantage and conduce to such a satisfying state of mind in the cook artist as in the use of all those bits of food that remain after a meal, too good to throw away and yet which, setting in the refrigerator, do not look as if they would ever make a palatable dish, tempting to both eye and palate. But a French Mrs. Providem would concoct a rechauffe which would, when tastefully dished, make her guests imagine they had some rare and costly viand, bought at great expense. And while American Mrs. Providem may not use so euphonious a name for her dishes, and the irreverent may dub them "left-overs," or even "resurrection dishes," she will substitute a better title than hash, and will have something for luncheon or tea equalling if not rivaling her French sisters.

First of all she will understand that all meats and most other foods except those containing mostly starch should only be heated, not cooked again, as a second cooking renders them indigestible and destroys the flavor.

In Mrs. Providem's Cupboard.

So, like old Mother Hubbard, she will go to her cupboard before going to market, and there she will find some of the remains of that veal of the Sunday dinner a half can of tomatoes which had been turned out of the can in an earthen bowl, that the combination of tin, acid and tomato and oxygen of the air should not form an irritant poison; a pint of milk, some of the tougher parts of a bunch of celery, the tender hearts of which had been used as a salad the day before; a portion of the baked fish which had been the Lenten dinner. The trip to the market added potatoes, Spanish onions, a package of good American macaroni, (a trip to Italy having made Mrs. Providem somewhat distrustful of the high sounding Italian national food), half a dozen bananas, the skins of which had just begun to bear the black spots which indicated their ripeness.

Her Sunday Dinner.

And this is how she made use of the foods:

Potato Paste: Run the remains of the cold veal through the coarse blade of the food chopper, boil half a dozen potatoes in their jackets, because of so doing the salts of the potatoes, which help to digest them, and at the same time give to the eater the necessary materials for building in the body bone, teeth, hair and nerves will be retained; when well cooked pour off the water and let the potatoes steam dry, peel quickly, mash, add a rounding tablespoon of butter, salt, a well beaten egg, and then knead in as much flour as the mixture will take without cracking. Roll out long and narrow, lay the minced meat along the center and roll up, fastening the potato together with a little egg. Brush over with egg beaten with water and bake in a hot oven until a light brown color. Observe that it does not hurt the digestive qualities of the potato to be cooked again, as potato is almost entirely starch, but the meat in the center, which is largely albumen, will be only heated through. Serve with tomato sauce.

Tomato Sauce: Put the half can of tomatoes over the fire in a stew pan, with a bit of bay leaf, large as a penny, a level teaspoon of salt, a saltspoon paprika or white pepper, a slice of onion and cook slowly ten minutes, then rub through a sieve and pour; stirring, into a tablespoon each of butter and flour, which have been rubbed together, and when well mixed, put on the stove and stir until thickened.

The celery and onions went to make: Celery Onions: Boil Spanish onions until tender, remove centers and fill cups so made, with celery, which has been cut up fine, cooked in water to cover until tender, then mixed with a white sauce made of half a cup of water, in which the celery was cooked and half milk. If any celery and sauce remains, pour round the onions in a bake pan, set in a slow oven and reheat. The hearts of the onions can be used another day for soup soubise.

Uses of the Artichoke.

Italian artichokes look more like a flower than a vegetable. The taste for them, like a fondness for olives, is believed to be a matter of education. They are as peculiar in taste as in appearance, and the slightly aromatic "bite" they give the tongue is disagreeable to some eaters. In Italy they are cheap. In the United States they are absurdly dear at certain seasons, costing about 25 cents each at this season. But the fact that they are considered correct for a swell luncheon will always assure their popularity, as was illustrated at a luncheon party not long ago. A hostess had invited twelve guests and during luncheon she remarked that she hoped every one was fond of artichokes, as her daughter had insisted on an artichoke course, as it was considered very chic. She further volunteered that she considered it very extravagant, as she paid 50 cents a piece for them. So she didn't have the heart to eat them, even if she had loved the "bristly" things. The guests were evidently fond of the "bristly things," as they swallowed their half dollar's worth all the more zestfully for the naive remark.
