Desperate Desmond

You Can Do More with a Frying Pan Than Cook Eggs on It---See Below

Copyright, 1911, National News Association.

By Hershfield

With wild cries the Turks rush to the tent in which Claude and Rosamond are held captives. They tie a stout rope around the bottom of the tent and thus inclose their prisoners like rabbits in a sack. Desmond, released from his former perilous position, rejoices that the hero whom he hates is once more in his power, and resolves that Claude shall not escape him this time.

As soon as the tent is securely tied up, the Turks and Desmond hoist it up in the air, so that it will form a better target for their rifles. Lest the attention of the Italian troops should be attracted, the villain has provided silencers for the rifles, and the noiseless volleys will destroy the prisoners in the tent without their friends being any the wiser. It is a crafty scheme and the lovers are truly in danger.

Needless to say, the heroic Claude is on the alert to protect his Rosamond. He knows Desmond's plan of the noiseless rifles, and casts about for a way to foil it. Quickly he seizes a couple of frying pans, and with these as shields Rosamond and he are comparatively safe. And the bullets as they ping against the frying pans make racket enough to wake the dead. Cagey Claude.

Italian soldiers, worn out by the campaign in the desert, were trying to get a snatch of sleep in preparation for the next day's toil. Bang -sing—pingpang! They start from their cots the night's rest effectively broken. It is Claude's plan at work. As the bullets rattle on the frying pans, the Italians get more and more angry, and rush to the scene of the disturbance.

Once on the scene, it is but a moment until Desmond is captured by the Italian soldiers. Just as quickly the tent is lowered and Rosamond and Claude are released. The wheel of fortune has turned again—we suppose the wheel of fortune does turn in other cases, but many persons don't think so. Perhaps it should be called the ladder of fortune instead of the wheel.

"I'm the boy!" cries Desperate Desmond, "but I'm no Paderewski." Blindfolded, he is placed at the piano, and if he strikes a wrong key a heavy hammer will drop on his head. (Would that some such device existed in this land of the music lesson—but this by the way. As Desmond was never noted for his music, his doom is apparently sealed. However, see to-morrow's pictures.
