Desperate Desmond

Just as the Villain Appears to Be Captured He Puts Another One Over on Claude

By Hershfield

Copyright, 1917, National News Association

Desmond flees for his life before a crowd of infuriated Chinese, headed by the gallant Claude Eclaire and his lovely Rosamond, whose beauty shines through even the Chinese costume which the villain had forced her to assume. Desmond knows what mercy he may expect from a crowd of infuriated Orientals, and as he sprints along his wits are working on some plan to foil his pursuers even in the narrow streets of the Chinese city.

As the international crook rushes along the street he sees before him an abandoned rickshaw. Instead of running around it the villain appears to seek destruction by going straight for the vehicle. It is too high for him to jump over and as he seizes the body of the rickshaw his pursuers expect to nail him. But the villain may have some plan under his seeming madness, and some one should warn Claude to be on the qui vive.

Instead of vaulting over the rickshaw Desmond has to all appearances made a fatal mistake, for he has flopped back and is now on the ground, with his maddened pursuers close on top of him. Evidently it is all off with the notorious scoundrel at last, although he is wildly endeavoring to attract the attention of some highbinder Chinese pals. The rickshaw has turned over under Desmond's weight. Shafts whizzed through the air.

There was a method in Desmond's seeming madness. As the rickshaw turns over the shafts come down and the queue of the pursuers is pinned in between them. Before they can turn to make their way out one of the highbinders who heard Desmond's call rushes up and by pulling together the ends of the shafts holds the party as securely as if they were all manacled. It is another triumph for Desmond and his quick think-tank.

Once again Rosamond is in the power of the heartless villain Desmond. Securely chaining her to the walls of the enclosure, Desmond leaves her to sally forth on some of his nefarious errands in the Chinese city, where he has many mysterious acquaintances among the oriental criminals. There seems but little hope for Rosamond now, for no white man but Desmond ever penetrates into this Chinese courtyard.

Even when hope seems to have utterly left us there comes a ray of cheer. Outside the walls of the enclosure a Chinese gentleman walks. He carries a tiny slipper which some woman dropped at the great ball, and he has made up his mind to find the oriental Cinderella at all costs. Now he hears Rosamond's voice, and traces it to the compound. Tomorrow we shall see what results.
