What Do You Know?

(Here's a chance to make your wits worth money. Each day The Bee will publish a series of questions, prepared by Superintendent J. H. Beveridge of the public schools. They cover things which you should know. The first complete list of correct answers received will be rewarded by $1. The answers and the name of the winner will be published on the day indicated below. Be sure to give your views and address in full Address "Question Editor," Omaha Bee.)

By J. H. BEVERIDGE.

1. Name the three largest high schools in Nebraska.
2. What was the total national debt at the end of the Civil war?
3. What was the result of the vote taken in congress early in 1864 on the question of submitting the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery?
4. One historian said: "Lincoln rejoiced when the great job was ended." What did he mean by the "great job?"
5. What officer is at the head of the Executive department of the United States?

(Answers Published Monday.)

MONDAY'S ANSWERS.

1. Who was the last colonial governor of New York who surrendered to the British? Peter Stuvesant.
2. By whom and under what circumstances was the following said: "No terms except unconditional surrender can be accepted?" Gen. Grant at Appomatox.
3. When and where did the first continental congress meet? September 5, 1774, Carpenter's hall, Philadelphia.
4. What service did Baron Steuben render to this country? Gave services to the colonies during the Revolution, drilled troops and introduced new tactics.
5. Who is the presiding officer of the state senate? Lieutenant governor.

Winner: William J. Hart, McCook, Neb.

Parents' Problems

III. Are "true" stories or fairy stories better reading for children?

Both are good and both are necessary. "True" stories give the child a knowledge of actual, important facts about life; fairy tales develop his imagination and give him a sense of the poetry of life. Provide him with both.

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

What Major Grantland Brought to Madge.

Hugh Grantland stepped across the threshold of the car drawing room and held out his hand in awkward greeting. As I took it I felt a renewal of the conviction I already held concerning the man, and that was his absolute dependableness and resourcefulness in any emergency. My worry began to slip from my shoulders before he had uttered a word.

"Good morning," I said with prompt perfunctoriness, for I saw that his natural diffidence was very much in evidence.

"Pardon me," he replied hastily, clumsily, with no return of my greeting, "but I—I could not help overhearing Miss Brown's remark about starving before the diner should be put on. I have made inquiries and have found that the diner cannot possibly be attached before 11—there is very serious engine trouble—so I am taking the liberty of placing my hamper at your service. I was afraid of this, and so had Hastings prepare a few things. I—I always travel prepared."

There was something in his almost ludicrous hesitation which betrayed to me the fact that he was uttering a kindly falsehood with the intention of putting me at my ease. That Hugh Grantland was the last man in the world to consider his own comfort when traveling was sure, and I knew as well as if he had told me that he had prepared the hamper of food especially for the rest of us.

The Major's Proviso.

His next words, however, rather modified my surprise.

"Please remember," he said, and there was a firm, almost stern note in his voice, "that the hamper is in your hands absolutely. I wish you to provide for your own wants first. I—I shall be very—disappointed if your usual generosity leads you to disregard my wishes in this respect."

There was the same note in his voice, the same look in his eyes would bring forth such a sacrifice of his fastidiousness.

I had a mental picture, also, of which had caused me uneasiness upon one or two occasions before. I could not keep my cheeks from flushing hotly, and an embarrassed realization rushed over me of the possible unpleasantness which might result if Dicky should walk down the aisle. I never thought—I told myself grimly—that I should long for the companionship of Rita Brown, but I found myself wishing that she would hurry back from her visit to Mrs. Durkee's quarters.

There was but one possible way, however, to treat Maj. Grantland's offer, and glad, indeed, was I that my baby's predicament gave me the excuse for accepting the gift which would otherwise have embarrassed me.

"You cannot imagine, Maj. Grantland," I said warmly, "from what a perplexing situation your generous offer has rescued me. In some manner the grip with the baby's food has been left behind, and—he is beginning to cry for his breakfast. Do you happen to have any milk in your hamper?"

An Outstretched Hand.

"Two traveling bottles," he answered promptly, "one hot and one cold," and I had another glimpse of the thoughtful care he had taken of me and mine. "I will bring the hamper here directly."

He stalked down the aisle to his own berth, summoned the porter, and that functionary, from some mysterious quarter produced and bore into my stateroom an unusually large hamper, much more clumsy to carry than a suitcase. I could not help a quick mental picture of Dicky burdening himself with such a hamper. I knew that the emergency could be dire indeed which my husband's face if he should happen to pass my drawing-room door and see Maj. Grantland unpacking a hamper of food. My contemplation of this possibility gave an unusual warmth to my welcome of Rita Brown as she hurried into the drawing-room, resentful disappointment written on her face—disappointment, however, which changed to an ingratiating smile as she caught sight of the young army officer.

"Don't tell me that is food!" she exclaimed, "real, honest-to-goodness food! Aren't you the thoughtful person though? Oh!" with a little scream of delight, as Maj. Grantland opened one of the bottles and poured some steaming milk into a cup. "My breakfast special!"

She held out her hand confidently for the cup, and I wondered if Maj. Grantland could fail to be impressed, as she evidently intended he should be, by the stunning picture she made in the wonderful wrap he had provided for my comfort during the long, cold ride to the city.

TWIN STORIES BY LUCY FITCH PERKINS

Irish Twins Prepare for the Fair.

For many weeks Eileen and Larry kept the Secret. They told no one but Dennis and Grannie Malone, and they both promised they would never, never tell.

Mr. McQueen worked hard—early and late—over his turnips and cabbages and potatoes, and Larry and Eileen helped by feeding the pig and chickens, and driving the cows along the roadsides, where they could get fresh sweet grass to eat.

One evening Mr. McQueen said to his wife: "Rent-day comes soon, and next week will be the Fair."

Larry and Eileen heard him say it. They looked at each other and then Eileen went to her Father and said: "Dada, will you take Larry and me to the Fair with you? We want to sell our pig."

"You sell your pig!" cried Mr. McQueen. "You mean you want to sell it yourselves?"

"You can help us," Eileen answered, "but it's our pig and we want to sell it, don't we, Larry?"

Larry nodded his head up and down very hard with his mouth shut tight. He was so afraid the Secret would jump out of it!

"Well, I never heard the likes of that!" said McQueen. He slapped his knee and laughed.

"We've got it all planned," said Eileen She was almost ready to cry because her Father laughed at her. "We've fed the pig and fed her, until she's so fat she can hardly walk, and we are going to wash her clean, and have a ribbon to tie on her ear. Diddy will look so fine and stylish, I'm sure some one will want to buy her."

Mrs. McQueen was just setting away a pan of milk. She stopped with the pan in her hand.

"Leave them go," she said.

Mr. McQueen smoked a while in silence. At last he said:

"It's your own pig ,and I suppose you can go, but you'll have a long day of it."

"The longer the better," said the Twins.

All that week they carried acorns and turnip-tops, and everything they could find that was good for pigs to eat, and fed them to Diddy, and she got fatter than ever.

The day before the Fair, they took the scrubbing pail and the broom and some water, and scrubbed her until she was all pink and clean. Then they put her in a clean place for the night, and went to bed early so they would be ready to get up in the morning.

When the first cock crowed, before daylight the next morning, Eileen's eyes popped wide open in the dark. The cock crowed again. Cocka-adoodle-doo!

"Wake up, Larry darling," cried Eileen from her bed. "The morn is upon us, and we are not ready for the Fair."

Italy Has Decided to Give Up Avlona to Albanians

Rome, July 28.—Italy has decided to abandon Avlona to the Albanians, according to reports printed in the Giornale d'Italia and the Corriere d'Italia. The newspapers say an Italo-Albanian agreement has virtually been reached on a basis involving, in addition to the abandonment or Avola by the Italians, the immediate cessation of hostilities, exchange of prisoners, the garrisoning by Italy of certain points constituting the defense of Avlona in the event of its being attacked by sea, and recognition by Italy of the independence of Albania according to the frontiers established by the conference of London in 1913.

I'M THE GUY!

I'M THE GUY who keeps house while his wife's away on a visit and lets dirty dishes pile up in the sink, lets cigar ashes and litter collect on the floor, and presents her with a fine job of "straightening up" to do when she gets home again.

Why should I keep the house in order just because she's away? It's her job anyway and she'll be all rested up to tackle it by the time she gets home.

If I stop to wash the dishes I use getting my own meals it would take all the good out of having her away. Besides it's easier to use another plate or another knife and fork than it is to clean those I used for the last meal.

When I've used up the dishes in the house, and all the pots and pans, I can get all my meals out for a change.

And as for the ashes and the litter—if I don't mind them why should she? And if I wan to bring my friends in while the house is upsidedown that's purely my own affair. Why should SHE worry about it? I don't.
