John Leath Takes Own Life

(By the United Press)

John Leath, who came to Box Butte county in the spring of 1885, held the office of county superintendent from 1887 to 1891, and who holds land and other property valued at over $60,000, took his own life by shooting himself with a revolver at about four o'clock Monday afternoon.

He had been to Alliance Monday morning and took a load of posts to the ranch, arriving there about four o'clock. While getting out of the wagon he fell behind one of the horses and a horse kicked him three times, breaking his left arm.

He then went to the house and she wanted to phone for a doctor to set the fractured arm. He said, "You had better phone for a doctor to cut my head off." He rushed into his own room. She heard him throwing things around in the room and went to the door to ascertain what the trouble was.

In a very short time she heard a shot in the room. She ran into the yard and called a boy who was working there and came back into the house with him, when they heard two more shots. They went into the room and found Mr. Leath lying on the floor, dead. The first shot had missed entirely and lodged in the wall.

Temporary insanity, caused by his broken arm, is believed to have been the cause. Sunday morning he was visiting with his brother James, and had made arrangements to attend the Stockmen's Convention with him.
