MR. STOCKMAN

It is undoubtedly true that a thorough knowledge of the various laws governing the particular instances wherein a claim for damages may arise is essential to the proper handling of a claim for damages, yet there is another field of knowledge just as important.

This second field is a knowledge of the manner and methods employed in handling stock from the time it is put in the pens at the shipping point until it reaches the purchaser at the Stock Yards, together with a knowledge of the stock growing industry and of stock itself.

Necessarily then, in order to competently handle stock claims there must be an association of individuals who are thoroughly familiar with all such conditions—who give time to the consideration and study of such.

We are so organized that we can handle your claims on a commission basis—no recovery, no pay.

We will appreciate your business and give it the careful and prompt consideration to which it is entitled.

Very truly yours,
