

the community can be built substantially and successfully.

"And we must work and strive every day. God gave us a concrete example of every day life. God didn't do good and preach just on Sundays. He worked and He preached day in and day out.

"I believe in Santa Claus more than I do in the 'fate' of individuals. There is no such thing as fate. Life is what we make it."

BAPTIST CHURCH

As last Sunday was to be observed all over the state as "Go to Sunday School and Stay for Church" day the Baptist Sunday school joined in with the effort and prepared for an interesting session. At 10 o'clock the young people assembled and Superintendent Fuller opened the school with a song, "I'll be a Sunbeam", the boys thoroughly enjoying the opportunity of whistling on the chorus of the song. Prayer, by Rev. Smith, followed and then another song, "I Love Him". The Scripture for the morning was the repeating in unison of the 23rd Psalm. The classes then assembled to consider the lesson on "Joah Repairing the Temple". After time given for the discussion of this subject, a song by the school, "Follow Me", was sung, with Camille Nohé accompanying on violin and Miss Spacht at piano. Two members of the school celebrated their birthdays giving also their offering. The remarks which followed given by the superintendent were full of interest. He gave a short report of the work of his school and included in his talk the following items of interest: The Home Department connected with this school has an enrollment of thirty to forty members, having added about a dozen new names within the past year. The Cradle Roll was said to be growing and a number of new names added within the last three months. Gold stars are given to any member of the school securing five new names, and the name of little Miss Jean Laing was mentioned as having earned one of the stars. A young men's club is encouraged by the superintendent and other members of the church, and the young folks meet two nights a week in the basement of the church which is fitted up for the boys in a way that they enjoy the time spent there. Gym exercises can be indulged in and all kinds of games are provided. Base ball and basket ball are encouraged, and the boys of the Sunday school take an active part in this form of athletics.

Missionary and temperance work is sustained and made items of interest in connection with this school and in fact everything is encouraged that works against evil, right principles are instilled into the minds of the young and every department was shown to be flourishing. The financial affairs of the school are also in good condition showing a reasonable sum in the treasury. The average attendance for October was 132, the highest attendance attained at any time being 160, and the lowest 120. The total attendance for last Sunday was 136, and the collection for the day was $2.94. This school consists of nine classes which meet in the main room of the church, and five classes which meet in the basement. Mrs. C. H. Fuller is superintendent of the department downstairs, and the younger folks of the school are instructed in a special way suited for children. After the assembling of the classes in the main room again, Miss Mable Sward favored with a solo, "O, Make Me Pure", accompanied by Miss Edna Bowman on the piano. The session was dismissed after prayer by Mr. Fuller.

The preaching service was opened with a solo by Camille Nohé, on violin, "Minuet in G", by Beethoven, accompanied by Mrs. E. G. Laing on piano, which was followed by the chorus singing the Doxology; invocation, by Rev. Smith; Scripture, 24th Psalm. Everyone then joined in the song, "My Father Knows", and the scripture was seventeen verses from the 6th epistle of Romans, followed with prayer by Rev. Smith and announcements for the week. During the offering Mr. Nohé rendered "Intermezzo, from Cavalleria Rusticana," accompanied by Mrs. Laing, after which Miss Alta Young sang a solo, entitled "Prayer".

Rev. Young of Bridgeport filled the pulpit and took his text from Romans 1, 16th verse. His theme was "The Purpose and Power of the Gospel", and in his introduction of the subject spoke unrestrainedly of the courage and boldness of Paul, commenting that we all realized the courage and boldness which Paul exemplified in his life and also that we all respected courage and boldness wherever it was found, but how often we find a lack of such characteristics. As followers of Jesus Christ he urged all to have a purpose in life. He gave at length the purpose of the gospel and went on to explain how the power of the gospel kept man from doing the wrong thing, making him strong, even lifting him from the lowest level, dwelling also on the transforming power of Jesus Christ. He said, "Be ye transformed by the power of Christ unto salvation, and then no one will be ashamed to be seen in the prayer meeting, or to carry and read their testament, even while on the street car. One's example and life demonstrates the power of Christ to transform all men. "The healing of body is a small matter with the saving of the soul. The greatest work is not the healing in life, but the transforming of the soul. Very emphatically he asked the question, "Why are not all men saved?" And showed in this respect the lack of faith and belief, the conditions of the gospel being to believe. "The power of Christ is broken by sin," he remarked, and also, "Sin unrepented separates us from Christ." In conclusion he asked, "What is your duty and what is mine? First, to declare the purpose of gospel, and second, to demonstrate the gospel in our lives, then we will be transformed and have the courage and boldness which is likened unto Paul."

TAKEN TO ASYLUM

Charley Trenkle, Who Has Relatives Living Near Alliance, Taken to Hastings State Asylum

Charley Trenkle, who has exhibited symptoms of insanity for some time and who has been treated in a sanitarium at Lincoln for several months, was brought back home Wednesday by his brother, Frank, in the hope that he had been cured. He was brought home Wednesday morning but it was soon seen that he was no better and it was necessary to send to Alliance for Sheriff Cox, who brought him to town Wednesday evening.

Mr. Trenkle will be taken to the state asylum for the insane at Hastings tonight.

VAUDEVILLE AT EMPRESS

Some Good Attractions Offered for the Balance of This Week—Feature Films

The management of the New Empress announces a double show for tonight (Thursday) and Friday. The special feature for tonight is a Mutual masterpiece "The Flying Twins" by Thanhouser, featuring Marion and Madeline Fairbanks.

As an added attraction tonight and tomorrow night Adeline Carr and company will appear in a comedy vaudeville sketch entitled "Hazel", and J. T. Pendegast will offer his latest "Rube Shaw" comedy, singing and dancing act.

Both acts come highly praised by managers and endorsements and press notices, and they have made good over the big time. These two vaudeville attractions will appear both nights, together with the regular picture programs.

Another big feature is booked for the Empress Saturday night—Hobart Bosworth in "The Scarlet Sin". The prices for these three nights will remain the same—10 and 15 cents.

NEW GROCERY STORE

F. A. Beiyou, Recently of Seattle, Says Alliance is Most Promising Field

In about two weeks a new grocery store will open in the Gadsby building on the corner of Third and Laramie. The proprietor and manager of the new store is F. A. Beiyou, who was recently in the grocery business in Seattle, where he owned and operated three stores. Since selling out several months ago he has been in California, and other western states, and in the Black Hills district, looking for a location. As soon as he saw Alliance and investigated he decided this was the most promising field he had seen and decided to locate here at once.

The new store will carry a full line of groceries and staples, and the stock is expected to arrive in a few days. In the meantime the building is undergoing some remodeling and improving. Part of the new fixtures have already arrived. Mr. Beiyou's family is here, and they have already secured a residence.

BURIED TREASURE

By MOLLY M'MASTER.

David Gordon was digging a hole in the earth in which to sink the fourth upright of his rustic arbor. When his spade hit and exposed to view a battered old tin box David was projected back in his memory to the days of playing pirate and of buried treasure. The bold buccaneer who had hid this particular box had been a female Captain Kidd. A sadly-mutilated doll, a string of blue grass beads and a tiny leather purse were the contents of the concealed receptacle. In time he managed to decipher a name and a date—"Barbara Folsom, 1900, August."

He put aside the box and proceeded with his digging. The name Barbara lingered in his mind, however, and, in some vague way, it seemed to suggest something familiar to him. It even seemed as if he had seen the name Barbara Folsom in print, but he could not recall when or where.

"It looks as if romance were not entirely extinct," he laughed. "I'd like to find that girl and send her the box for a birthday gift." This seemed so utterly absurd that he laughed still more decidedly. For again he knew, Barbara Folsom, formerly a pirate, might now be doing missionary service in South Africa or the far East. Surely not—heaven forbid! Not a girl who had once been a pirate and buried a cast-off doll and a string of blue beads!

"And it seems to me that it is only recently and in some magazine or other that I have seen that name," he reflected.

When he had finished setting the uprights he went in to dinner, still bearing with him the not-to-be-silenced name of Barbara Folsom—who was she? He found his answer, sooner than he expected. It was the very name itself under the title of the very first piece of magazine fiction which met his eye.

"After all she's only a well-known woman," he sighed regretfully, for David did not take kindly to literary women.

Still, for some reason he could hardly fathom, he was prompted to write to the magazine office and ask Barbara Folsom for her address and the privilege of calling on her.

Barbara Folsom not only replied by mail, but intimated graciously that she should be glad to see him at her home on the following afternoon. Incidentally, she confessed that she was Mrs. John Fraser in private life.

Still, he felt no slight degree of uncertainty as to the wisdom of his procedure as he stood before the entrance of a modest apartment house in the Washington square neighborhood. He carried a bag in which was the pirate's treasure and he wondered what memories it would inspire in the mind of the one to whom it had belonged so many years ago. He had quite resigned himself to the existence of a Barbara junior who would probably regard the battered doll with scornful disdain.

David was ushered into a cozy little room by Mrs. Fraser herself. She proved to be a delightful little matron, but he could not find in her the faintest resemblance to his conception of what the child pirate of long ago should be like.

"Barbara Folsom is only a pen name," she explained, after she had heard his story. "I borrow the names of my friends to lend dignity to my work."

"Then I have not found my pirate after all," he sighed rather distressedly.

"Lo—she comes!" laughed the little matron, rising and taking into her motherly arms a young woman who had entered just in time to hear David's wistful observation. "This is Barbara Folsom. I use her name oftener than any other nowadays because I love her best of all. Barbara, this is Mr. David Gordon of whom I told you."

And almost before he had time to recover his self-possession a charming young woman, with merry eyes and a most unpractical expression, held out her hand in friendly greeting.

"And now I will see about some tea," bustled Mrs. Fraser, leaving them together.

Barbara was immensely interested in the recovered treasure. She welcomed the sorry-looking doll as if she were a long-lost relative and her bright eyes moistened at sight of the little purse and its cabalistic slips of paper. She hugged the string of beads to her heart and then clasped it about her slender neck.

"So you live in our old homestead," she said. "And I suppose you have a crew of little pirates who are hiding their treasure as I did so long ago?"

"I am not a married man," he answered simply, "but I do live in your old home."

She sighed—rather wistfully, David thought.

"This is all most romantic," chirped Mrs. Fraser returning with a tea cart bearing the fragrant Oolong and cakes. "I have just had an inspiration for a new story. The heroine is to be a youthful Captain Kidd in petticoats and she is to be captured by the man who finds her buried treasure. Isn't that perfectly great?"

"It certainly is," agreed David soberly.
