Two well known Alliance men are "up a tree". One offers to bet the other a new suit of clothes that he can go the longest after the first of the year without smoking, but as the second man is in the cigar business and frequently has to "test" out new brands offered by cigar salesmen, he hardly knows whether or not to take up the bet. He says he would like the suit of clothes, but—

Since the recent heavy snows and in the absence of hills in Alliance, the youngsters of town find it necessary to "hook on" with their sleds behind passing autos. There have been many narrow escapes from injury by these youngsters, who trail behind an auto thirty or forty feet. Some kind hearted motorists can be seen going down the street at a slow and safe gait for the kids, with six or eight yelling youngsters trailing along behind. One wealthy Alliance man spent a large portion of Tuesday afternoon out with the kids in this way and he seemed to enjoy the fun as well as they.

Link Lowry, the popular automobile man, is a good story teller, and is perfectly at home when telling a good one to a bunch of interested listeners. One day this week Link was telling one about when he was a ranchman on the plains many years ago. He was driving to Pine Ridge for fuel, and had a big, bony mule named "Jack". Link stopped over night at Marsland and along towards "Midnight Jack" developed the stomachache. There was no drug store at Marsland so Link ran to the nearest saloon and purchased a quart of good rye whiskey for him. It took a lot of work to get Jack to assimilate that quart but the next morning he was feeling fit and fine. "That mule," said Link, "got to be the most expensive mule you ever saw. For a while he had the stomachache once every month and then every week and it always took a quart of good rye to cure it. Finally I sold him to a fellow in Iowa who had a saloon and who could afford to keep him. That was a good many years ago. If he still has Jack I don't know what he will do, now that Iowa is going dry on January first. That mule sure loved liquor."

Harper, well known Alliance business man, has filed for the nomination for state representative for the district comprised of Box Butte and Sheridan counties, on the Republican ticket. This is the state office now held by F. M. Broome. Mr. Harper is well known, having built up a big business here. He has many friends and will make a good race should he be nominated, which is probable.

The Alliance volunteer fire department has sold a large number of tickets to the annual ball, to be held at the opera house Saturday night. This will be the event of the year and is a public affair.
