How to Have Beautiful Hair

The main essential for beautiful tresses, whether golden, auburn, chestnut or black, is good health.

Yet we have all known robust, athletic women whose locks were not beautiful; and the thickest and most luxuriant growth of hair I ever saw was that of a woman who was a confirmed sufferer from spinal trouble. But hers was not beautiful hair either. On the contrary, its color and texture seemed to reflect the invalidism of the woman. It was heavy, lifeless and nondescript. It lay on her head in great, compact masses that were neither artistic nor becoming.

Nevertheless, the athletic woman envied and openly admired the thick coils and braids which crowned the invalid. Her own hair and scalp were healthy enough but they lacked the care and attention bestowed upon the head which rested so much of the time against a pillow. The result was thin hair that should have been thick, dull hair that should have been lustrous, and a braid reaching in length only to a little below the shoulders.

Fresh air and sunshine will do wonders for the hair under certain conditions. Any woman can supply these conditions without expense and with little trouble. Of course she will have to devote a little time and patience to the task and she must not wait until years of neglect have robbed the hair of all of its natural vigor.

I am not in favor of spending large sums of money on shampoos, waves, massages and so-called treatments. Often they do more harm than good. This is largely due to lack of skill, lack of personal interest and even lack of intelligence on the part of the one who does the work. There are skilled hair dressers and efficient scalp doctors but one usually discovers them only after damage has been done by someone more interested in the size of the tip she is going to receive from or victim than in the benefit she is paid to bestow. Such a person can usually be relied upon to produce immediate results, according to the desire of her patron. She will make the hair fluffy or glossy, light or dark, round-curled or waved, but she is apt to be quite without conscience and often without knowledge as to the means and materials by which these various effects are produced.

Therefore I advise the average woman of modest income to be her own beauty doctor. Shampoo the hair when it is necessary. Use oil water if possible. A little salt in the water is good. A non-alkaline soap should be used. When the weather permits it is always best to dry the hair in the sunshine. Light hair is always prettiest when fluffy. Dark hair should be glossy and smooth, unless that style of coiffure is too trying. Careful brushing is beneficial. A careless wielding of the brush will break off more and more of the hair until it becomes, in general, very uneven. If it is too dry and brittle use a little olive oil—just a very little—rubbed into the scalp each night the tips of the fingers. Dandruff should never be permitted to form. The scalp pores must be kept open and circulation stimulated. Worry and anxiety will do more to destroy the beauty of the hair in a week than the average person can cultivate in many weeks. A bad state of nerves will cause the hair to droop and often to fall out. And here we are, back at the only firm foundation—health.

If your hair begins suddenly to get thin, coming out in great quantities, make haste to apply promptly and lavishly a good quinine tonic, preferably one prescribed by your own doctor or druggist who will take a personal interest in seeing that no harmful ingredients are included in the compound.

The next thing to do is to consider carefully what caused the hair to fall and then remedy or remove that cause. Overwork, nervousness, anxiety and sometimes sudden change of climate and the careless application of water containing alkali, will all cause the hair drop out.

A Pennsylvania woman wrote to me from Wyoming, where she was visiting, that her hair, which was unusually thick and long, had suddenly commenced to come out by handfuls each time she drew a comb through it. I replied, telling her just what I have told you. From that time she has not had a hair. In two or three applications she had used the contents of the entire bottle. Results of two kinds were immediately noticeable. The hair stopped falling as suddenly as it had commenced. But the woman's beautiful hair was dyed, in streaks, an ugly, grayish brown. That color did not wash off nor wear off entirely for years.

This incident illustrates how careful one ought to be in applying even water to the scalp when the peculiar properties of that water are not known. It had been this woman's custom to wet her hair whenever she bathed her face and to dampen her long braids each night. The alkali in the water caused the damage. The dye in the "tonic" produced the discoloration.

In this particular instance the use of the colorful lotion was necessary. The woman had no alternative. It was the only hair tonic immediately available and it was guaranteed to stop the hair from falling. Whatever its ingredients may have been they were certainly efficacious in that respect. Desperate cases require desperate remedies and this woman had to choose quickly between losing all her hair and risking its color and quality by the use of a "patent" tonic of which she knew nothing.

Ordinarily, however, there is no excuse for any woman to risk the beauty of her hair by hit or miss applications of strange mixtures. Nine times out of ten they are no only useless but unnecessary. That which might benefit one person could easily prove harmful to another.

There are so many old-fashioned, home remedies always within reach if one cares to use them. Salt, soda, corn-starch, eggs (when they are not a dollar a dozen), vinegar, kerosene, sage walnut, borax, sulphur and many other articles found in the average home, all have their uses and, when applied with judgment in the particular cases for which they are suited, seldom fail to produce beneficial results.

THE SEVEN-YEAR ITCH

(If You Get It Once You Never Want It Again)

—Punk Pieces of Poetry—
OF W. C.

His nose is small and his eyes are rare;
There's nothing compared with his greasy hair—
His mouth is large and his lips are red;
And from these flows the knowledge of his empty head;
He thinks he's a man but I think he ain't,
His face is full of powder and paint;
His feet are nearly as big as his hands,
And his sinewy muscles are like rubber bands;
His mother keeps him as clean as a pin,
And he has a great big dimple on his little chin;
He'd be the smartest one in school if it wasn't for the rest,
An' in everything he ain't the best;
His name is Bill and so is mine,
An' we get in trouble time after time;
When the teacher says William recite on arithmetic,
He lets me do the work, the poor hick.

—By Brainless Bill.

Things That Make You Laugh

Glen has been very sick lately. We are unable to get the exact reason, but we think when he got 100 spelling it gave him such a shock that he hasn't recovered yet! ! ! ! !

Wild and Worly Injuns.

When suddenly there was a guy russed out of the prairie who was known to about six persons in a one horse town about a hundred miles off as Punk Paul and when looking over Bill he noticed that he had only stubbed his toe and stopped the circulation off.

Resemblance.

Bill (to a friend)—See here, do you mean to say you named that dog after ME?
Friend—"Yes."
Bill—"Why?"
Friend—"Because we took an x-ray off it and it never had any brains."

Hank is very pale lately. We don't know the real reason, but we think SHE quit him, and as Tim's got Mary and Joe Marie, so no wonder he's sorrowful. Another reason we think she quit him is because she is looking very well lately!

Our Paper

We're proud of this little paper of ours,
It tells of your joys it tells of your sorrows;
In fact it tells everything t'at's new,
About our town and our school to.

—By Punk Paul.

When me an' Willum went to the show we saw Gladys an' Sadie looking anxiously towards the hotel where Jasper lives.

Punk Paul—"Bill why has Jim been looking so pale lately?"
Brainless Bill—"He heard the candy kitchen was going to CLOSE."

THE END

Bookkeepers are merely figure-heads in the business.

INFORMATION CENSUS

A farm for purposes of the census includes all the land cultivated by a single farmer either by his own labor alone or with the help of hired labor. It may be in two or more separate tracts, but it is all one farm if it is under one management.

The land cultivated by a share hand or cropper, or by a cash renter, constitutes a separate farm and is not counted as the owner's farm or included in it, but should be reported in the name of the tenant.

Census enumerators will carry identification cards as well as written commissions. These will be shown promptly upon request of any person.

In all cases where persons are suspicious of impostors these identification cards should be demanded. It is against federal law to impersonate a census official, and impostors should be reported to the authorities. The act of congress providing for the census makes it the duty of all persons to furnish the information asked for by the enumerators to fill out the census schedules. No persons should hesitate, neglect, or refuse to answer fully and accurately all the enumerator's questions. He only asks the questions necessary to fill the schedules as required by the act of congress.

Keepers of hotels, apartment houses, boarding or lodging houses, or tenements, must assist the enumerator in getting the information concerning the persons living in such hotels and houses.

THE "VICIOUS TRIANGLE"

"Today," said Farmer Fortunate to his good wife, "I will Ford over to the mill with some wheat, for we can use a little spare change."

So he loaded his little truck, cranked it, and started off.

"Good morning," said he to Miller Middleman, as he drew up to the platform in front of the mill. "I have here a load of wheat which you may want to buy."

"Come in my office," replied Miller Middleman, "and we'll make a deal."

"I'll pay you the market quotation, but that's pretty high, Farmer Fortunate."

"Perhaps—perhaps—but then you know the H. C. L.," And Farmer Fortunate laughed jovially.

A check was made out—a fat check—the grain unloaded, and Farmer Fortunate turned his radiator homeward.

Miller Middleman stood in the doorway and gazed after him thoughtfully.

Blacksmith Brawn wiped his hands on a bunch of waste, took off his leather apron, put on his coat and hat. It was noon and at the end of the village street was a little white house where his helpmate had dinner ready.

But, first, there was an errand to attend to. The flour bin was low. He had promised that morning to stop at the mill on his way home.

"A fifty pound sack of Middleman's Monarch," said Blacksmith Brawn to Miller Middleman, as he entered the mill office.

It was quickly forthcoming.

"How much?" asked Blacksmith Brawn, producing an old wallet.

Miller Middleman told him—and there was an apology in his voice as he named the price. "H. C. L. is responsible," he explained.

Blacksmith Brawn gazed at the sack thoughtfully before he finally hoisted it to his shoulder and went on his way.

Meantime Farmer Fortunate rode blithely along. But trouble was in store. A mile from his home his motor suddenly stopped. He got out, investigated, tinkered. After an hour he finally succeeded in getting two cylinders to function, and thus disabled he turned around and hobbled back to town. Blacksmith Brawn, the village machinist, would be able to locate the trouble.

"Good afternoon," said Farmer Fortunate, as he sputtered up to the door of the smithy; "I'm having some trouble with my generally well-behaved little Ford and I want you to fix it."

"At your service in a moment," said Blacksmith Brawn, as he looked up from a horse he was shoeing.

When he finally located, diagnosed and corrected the trouble two hours had slipped by.

"What's your bill?" queried Farmer Fortunate, pulling out his well-filled purse.

Blacksmith Brawn told him, and added, "H. C. L., you know."

It was a thoughtful Farmer Fortunate who chugged his way home again.

And so the "vicious triangle" goes on.—The Mailbag.

Visitor: "I am collecting for the poet's hospital. Will you contribute?"

Editor: "With pleasure. Call tonight with the ambulance and I'll have a poet ready."—American Legion Weekly.

"You're in a bad way, my friend," announced the doctor to the young Irish lad in the hospital. "Would you like to see the priest?"

"Did ye say I have scarlet fever?" asked the boy.
