Fashion magazine says that "simple clothes are the fashion in Paris and not many of them."

A few more days of this warm weather and it will be safe to take 'em off.

To be sure, better wait until the paving gang actually starts grading.

That'll be next week—maybe.

More fashions: Men's coats will have no waist line this year.

Cheers us up to know we are strictly in style.

Despite two whole days of nice weather, there are some folks who persist in telling mud stories.

We heard one this noon at the boarding house. It seems that some rancher and his wife were driving a team to town, when one of them disappeared, harness and all. They have fished in that mud hole for two days, but have finally given it up.

Mule couldn't live much longer than that, anyway.

Another mud story: Man walking along Box Butte avenue saw a hat floating on top of a mud puddle. He reached down to pick it up, and uncovered the head of a man who was gasping for breath. "I'm standing on the automobile," he explained.

That's one we don't believe.

Shortage of silk and woolen materials leads a brother editor to decide to spend his vacation at the beach this year.

Vice President Marshall declares that the dry law wouldn't have received twenty votes if the senate had voted in secret session.

What was to hinder?

Experts are always taking the joy out of life. Here comes some brother who announces that enough energy is exhausted in one wrestling match to plow two hundred acres of corn.

A comp (outrageous lingo for a compositor) newly arrived in our town and who is an artist with type, on Monday morning beheld on the ground as he came to work the still form of a robin which had made a bum guess and ran into the snow-storm and freezing weather. The comp stopped and contemplated the scene. "Pore little fellow," he said, "You couldn't stand the cold. There are lots of good folks around here who would have taken you in, had they known." Then, as he walked away: "I would like to have shaken hands with you, little pal."—Mt. Morris (Ill.) Index.

Today's Best Story:

"Doctor," said the notorious tightwad, "do you think you can get this tooth out without causing a shock to my nervous system?"
"I'm afraid not," replied the dentist, dryly. "It will cost you a dollar."

MONDAY MAY 24th

These pictures come direct from the first showing at the George M. Cohan Theatre, New York, where large houses acclaimed them the most remarkable films of their kind ever offered to the public.

New York Sport Lovers Are Fairly Wild Over Them

After what sporting experts consider to be the most spectacular as well as scientific wrestling battle that has ever been fought since the days of ancient Rome, Joe Stecher was proclaimed the undisputed champion of the world, and he is a greater attraction than ever.

JOE STECHER is the world's champion heavyweight catch-as-catch-can wrestler. He wrestled the title from Earl Caddock, reversing the result of their previous meeting in Omaha three years ago, in two hours, five minutes, and thirty seconds of competition in Madison Squart Garden last night. Stech effected the victory by the use of his noted specialty, the body scissors and wrist lock. There was no fluke or fault about the result, Stecher won clearly and decisively.

A good sized fortune was spent upon the taking of these pictures. As the bout progressed the two gladiators were bathed in a brilliant flood of light from the batteries of huge arc lamps that moaned and sang from the platforms perched on the girders of the Garden.

Both Stecher and Caddock saw the pictures and were deeply interested in the screen version of the battle in which they were the principals. The pictures will be shown for one day and special arrangements are being made by the management to handle the large crowds which will turn out to view the films. They are drawing record-breaking crowds wherever they are being shown in throughout Nebraska and Iowa.
