NO REASON FOR IT.

When Alliance Citizens Show a Way.

There can be no reason why any reader of this who suffers the tortures of an aching back, the annoyance of urinary disorders, the pains and dangers of kidney ills will fail to heed the words of a neighbor who has found relief. Read what an Alliance citizen says:

Mrs. J. M. Cott, 714 Missouri St., Alliance, says: "Though it has been some time since I have used Doan's Kidney Pills, I gladly recommend them. I have known of many people, who like myself, have found them good. I suffered from kidney disorders for quite awhile. I had backache, felt tired and languid and at times was very nervous. Then, too, my kidneys acted irregularly. Doan's Kidney Pills gave me relief from these ailments." Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply act for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Scott had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

Lilac toilet water may have a 79 per cent "kick," as explained by two men accused of drinking it, but the trouble is that most men object to its 100 per cent fragrance.

Perhaps the former kaiser would be glad to be entertained almost anywhere if the allies would agree to let him him "stay put," leaving him alone with his saw, his sawbuck and his memories of former power.

Why should Germany worry if its debt is $204,000,000,000 marks? A mark is worth practically nothing and what does 204,000,000,000 times nothing amount to anyway.

The more we read about sudden and mysterious illness and deaths following social affairs the more inclined we are to pass up recipes for lemonade.

Predictions of price drops are great stuff. They cheer up the ultimate consumer without interfering with anybody's profits.

Some people's idea of the height of epulence is to be able to go where it is too hot in winter and where it is too cool in summer.

WANDA-ROSE

By MILDRED WHITE.

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union)

The little girl who had been wandering uncertainly about the corridor of the great office building paused at last before a glass door.

"James Lorrimer," she spelled audibly; "Attorney and Counselor at Law." Then the little girl opened the door and peeped inside.

A young woman bending over a typewriter looked up and smiled reassuringly.

"That's Mr. Lorrimer, isn't it, sitting there in the farthest room behind a desk? I'll go and find him myself." "Who sent you in here?" he asked.

"No one sent me," the little girl quietly returned. "I just came." She seated herself in a wide chair at the opposite side of the desk. "I came by myself on the street car; I found your name last night among the lawyers in our telephone book. It's a business visit and I brought all the money in my bank to pay you. I've got over a dollar. Please tell me how to get un-adopted." "To get unadopted," he repeated. "So you don't like the adoption business, eh? Well, how did it happen? And what is your name, young lady?"

"I'm Wanda-Rose," the child answered with dignity, "and I don't like being adopted very much. It happened when the beautiful lady visited our orphanage. She liked me because I made her smile; it had grown very hard, she said, for her to smile, so she managed with the directors to adopt me and took me home with her. She was the first mother I'd ever had. Some one found me long ago in the orphanage garden, when I could hardly talk at all, and what I called myself sounded like 'Wanda,' so that's the name they gave me. My beautiful lady added Rose; she says I'm like a rose to her. But, please, will you make me unadopted?"

The big man got up and lifted the tiny figure to his knee. "I'm afraid that I don't understand all this, Wanda-Rose," he said, whimsically. "If your beautiful lady is also kind, why wish to be unadopted?"

The child raised reproachful eyes. "As if I'd ever wish to be," she said. "It's for her sake that I'm doing it. So that he will come back again."

James Lorrimer shook his head. "I will have to ask you to explain further, Wanda—"

"Rose," she finished, severely. "He went away two years ago; you see he was my beautiful lady's husband, Ellen, that's the cook, says that they were very happy together until my lovely lady's sister died and she took her little boy to raise. She was so fond of that boy; he was delicate, Ellen says, and my mother—I call her mother, you know—had to stay with him a great deal. The boy's name was Roger, and Ellen says that my mother's husband got very 'noyed about Roger. An' he'd talk cross when he wanted her to go some place an' my mother couldn't because of Roger, an' she'd cry, and then by an' by her husband went away, an' my mother told Ellen he was never coming back, an'—he never did."

The lawyer arose abruptly and put the child from him. His brows were drawn together again and his gaze was darkly piercing.

"Well?" he asked.

Wanda-Rose settled herself again quietly in the big chair. "Well, Roger's father married after that, Ellen says, an' he took Roger away; an' my mother used to cry a great deal, she was so dreadfully lonely. Not for Roger, Ellen says, but for her husband. He didn't know that she was lonely, of course, or even that Roger had gone; he just kept on staying away. Then my beautiful lady began to visit the hospital and orphanage, an' brings us toys an' roses, an' she called me 'her rose.' I liked to make her laugh; she had such a pretty laugh—like birds singing when you hear them in the morning. An' one day she took me home with her to be her little girl. But I couldn't keep her laughing because she cried so much over the photograph in the frame in her room; an' I asked her was it her husband's photograph and was he ever coming back? She just put her head down then and cried harder than ever an' she said: 'Never, darling, now—I'm afraid.' So I thought that 'now' meant me—that he'd never come 'now' you see, 'cause I was here—like Roger. An' he'd gone away because of Roger—or Roger is what started the trouble, anyway, Ellen says. So I came down here to get unadopted. Lawyers do such things, don't they?" Wanda-Rose paused.

"You ought to be gladder to do it than anyone else," she said, shrewdly.

James Lorrimer stood for a long time looking down into the street below. Then he came to bend over the little waiting girl, and his face was very tender.

"So you'd give your own happiness for the sake of your beautiful lady, Wanda-Rose?" he said. "And do you think that she could still find happiness with a husband who had been so unkind? For if you do, we are going together, you and I."

The child sighed happily. "She'll want us both," she said, "because, you see, she loves us."

"Me?" asked the big man. The one tremulous word was all that he could say. Wanda-Rose nodded confidently. "She told me that she loved you. That's why I thought you'd be glad to know, when I hunted you out in the telephone book."
