The Cash Plan-Get the Habit A Business Talk-By W. R. Harper

Alliance, Neb., June 11, 1920 That was an interesting interview given recently thru a Washington dispatch by R. C. Leffingwell, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. Pointing out that the one sure method of reducing the cost of living is for people to stop buying things they do not need, Secretary Leffingwell and

The public is buying too much of everything. Everybody has a job and can get another. This situation always brings over-spending and overspending brings high prices.

Over-spending not only brings high prices, but it crip-ples the purchasing power of the buying public. Thus it interferes with that normal and regular trade so de-sirable for the good order of communities and desirable, also, for the permanent welfare alike of merchant and Spasmodic reductions without concern for the possible purchase price or the ability to replace goods at rea-sonable prices would encourage increased buying, but it would encourage also reckless spending and the pur-chase of goods not really needed at the time.

The cash plan is a system devised for mutual and permanent benefit to buyer and seller. It works automatically in saving to both, for the obvious reason that people buy more carefully on cash than they do on credit. The arguments which Harper's has so often presented to the public are well summed up by Secretary Leffing-well when he says, "Over-spending brings high prices." Only through systematic effort on fundamental lines will the purchasing public obtain permanent reduction in the cost of living. That the cash plan brings these results is indicated by the fact that Harper's thronged these days is well satisfied customers—satisfied with the quality and the price of goods offered at our counters,

Do not forget that men and women are creatures of habit. The man habitually in debt suffers through worry as well as through depreciation in his capital. Once having adopted the cash plan for himself and family, he finds so much relief that he wonders that he did not long ago adopt the simple expedient of buying for cash as a means for unloading care. Harper's cash plan has not only rendered direct service to Harper's customers in the way of reduced prices, but it has provided an exam-ple which many of those customers have followed to adple which many of those customers have followed to advantage. Numerous letters have been received showing how many of these customers have carried the plan into their general affairs. As a result considerable money has been saved to these customers. More than that, many of these letters acknowledge the very apparent fact that the cash plan makes for serenity on the part of individuals, who thus avoid the perplexities of debt. Likewise it makes for senenity on the part of the merchant, who, buying and selling for cash, is able to make permanent reductions and is not disturbed by any of the storms on the commercial seas. storms on the commercial seas.
