A discussion is raging through some of the eastern papers as to the date when the first newspaper was published in the United States. On of them has gone so far as to say that "Benjamin Franklin did not found the Saturday Evening Post or any other paper in 1725."

The press agents are again demonstrating their right to receive a salary. The average country newspaper has been laying off the mimeographed stuff that pours in with every mail, but the man who writes up the dope for the Nebraska committee on public utility information is getting by. This fellow is an expert camoufleur. He writes a pleasing little article telling how newspapers are just like public utility corporations—they need more money. The talk about more money blinds the average editor and so he prints half a column, three-fourths of which is boosting the public utilities in their demands for higher rates, and the other fourth a weak sympathy plea for the newspapers. The sooner the country publishers learn to throw all this junk in the wastebasket, the sooner they'll quit pulling the other fellow's chestnuts out of the fire.

THE RIGHT TIME
The new chaplain very much wanted to amuse as well as instruct his men, and, accordingly, on one occasion, arranged for an illustrated lecture on Bible scenes and incidents. One seaman who possess a phonograph was detailed to discourse appropriate music between the music pictures. The first of these represented Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden. The sailor cudged his brains and ran through his list, but he could think of no music exactly appropriate to the picture. "Please play up!" whispered the chaplain. Then an inspiration came to the seaman, and to the consternation of the chaplain and the delight of the audience, the phonograph ground out, "There's only one girl in this world for me".

Floyd Lucas tells of an Oklahoma man who dropped into the lumber yard office the other day. They got to talking about the crops, as people will, and Lucas asked him how things were in Oklahoma. "How's the corn?" was one of the questions. "Oh, pretty fair," was the answer, "but it won't make over fifteen gallons to the acre."

And next we read in Bill Maupin's paper that his garden is a disappointment to him. The potatoes, Bill says, are running in not to exceed half-pint sizes.

If that list of customers of the bootleggers is ever made public, a lot of people will need to buy locks for the old cellar door.

And what if the hardware dealers should keep a record of those who buy new locks?

One page in the bootleggers' ledger reveals the fact that one man either has an extraordinary capacity or else is peddling the stuff himself. This man in two days bought the following amounts: One gallon, two pints, one-half pint, three pints, two gallons, four pints.

A thirst like that is either a gift or a curse, depending upon the availability of the supply.

The inspired compositor—or it may have been the inspired typewriter, ruined the best joke we have made in months. We knew that the republican brethren would be apt to crow over the fact that Colonel John Maher had turned republican, but in printed we made it appear that he had come out for Cox instead of Harding.

However, nothing was wrong in our reference to the fact that the democrats are to gain the support of Colonel Evans. At least the colonel has not denied it.

And, as we said before, a fair exchange is no robbery.

If the democrats can get rid of a few others as easily as they lost Colonel Maher, victory is certain.

Its fairly certain, anyway.

KIND WORDS FROM THE CHADRON CHRONICLE

Chadron Chronicle: "Alliance was unable to put over the census bureau the increase that they had hoped to in Alliance's census to make it come over the five thousand mark. Alliance was given an official count of about 4700, or a hundred or so more than Chadron got. The people over at our sister city immediately got busy and through their commercial club and Rotary club took another count of the people and sent it into the department who had given them some encouragement that if, upon comparison, they could show an increase they would be certified that way in the census report. Their recount added about four hundred names to the roll of inhabitants in Alliance, but when the figures had been worked over by the Washington people it dwindled to an increase of twelve, which the federal authorities thought was too small an increase to change the records for; so thus again we condole with Alliance that we are not as big as think we ought to be."
