BIG FROGS

Some of these days the great American middle class is going to rise in its might and swat all the big frogs in little puddles who feel the importance of their position. Hardly a day goes by but some evidence may be secured showing where some man, supreme in authority in his own little balliwick, puts his foot down on some public improvement because he was not consulted concerning all the little details. Small men like to be consulted, and are hurt and peeved when it isn't done.

Take, as an example, the case of the mayor of Chadron. He, in common with the members of his council and the citizens of the town, were wild for a city manager. They got a good one in Rayburn, who saved them almost the full amount of a year's salary in the first three months of his incumbency. But the mayor, being a big frog in his particular puddle, objected to the city manager's way of running things. In the good old days, whenever a dime was spent, he had been asked about it. Rayburn, under the ordinance creating his job, didn't have to toady to the mayor and didn't do it. This failure to observe the small town amenities cost him a nasty struggle and finally resulted in his resignation.

From Inavale comes another instance of a like sort. The courts have been appealed to in an effort to prevent the consolidation of school districts. The grounds given show that some of the larger frogs have had their toes trod upon. As a result of their efforts to demonstrate their authority, the consolidated school will probably go overboard. There isn't much doubt that with consolidated districts the pupils would be much better off. They would have better teachers, for one thing, for better teachers could be hired with more money available. They would have a better school building as well. It is possible that they might have been saved a walk to school, for in some consolidated districts enough money has been saved to send auto busses around to collect the students.

Despite the fact that the consolidated district plan means better things for country school pupils, every so often we find some small town autocrat standing in the way of the wheels of progress. Some day there'll be a large fly swatter designed to handle this class of citizen. And when that day comes, there'll be no dearth of applicants for the privilege of using it.

September 5 and 6 the Style Revue, a wonderful treat for ladies. See Fashion Shop ad today.

Nichols and Covert, the enterprising shoe repair men, have installed in their shop a new Landis No. 12 stitchee, the latest thing in shoe repairing equipment. This stitchee was installed at a heavy expense but the men expect it to pay for itself in quicker and better work. It is an interesting machine to watch in operation.
