RANDOM SHOTS

Probably a poor guess is better than nothing, but somehow we wish the Gering Courier would guess in Alliance's favor once in a while. It announced the score of the Thanksgiving game between this city and Scottsbluff as 15 to 0, with Alliance on the short end of the score.

However, it got the figures right in the Bayard-Beatrice game, where in the Pride of the Valley went down to defeat, 80 to 0.

Since the last few defeats, Bayard hasn't done any crabbing about the way other teams get rough.

Some day they'll learn that football isn't played by wagging the jaw.

And that alibi, no matter how sensational, aren't as good playing the game.

The Scottsbluff newspapers aren't putting out any additional information on their million dollar packing plant that city is due to receive, "provided the change can be made."

You remember the story of the gawky country lad who attended his first dance. He sat around with the wallflowers for a half an hour, and finally mustered up his courage. He walked over in front of the prettiest girl in the room, and bashfully said: "Miss, may I have this dance." The pretty girl gave him the once over and wasn't attracted by the prospect. "You may not," she said. The boy didn't know how to make a graceful exit. He stood grinning at her for half a minute, colored up, and then said, sotto voce, or almost sotto, "Gee, I wish I hadn't sayed anything!"

There's an old saying regarding the counting of unhatched chickens that is herewith called to the attention of anyone who is in search of wisdom.

In the present stage of the game.

that saying is equally interesting to both Alliance and her envious neighbor.
