WAGE CUT TO AFFECT EVERY PART OF SYSTEM

Reports indicate that the reduction of forces that affects employees of the Burlington railroad from the rank of superintendent down will extend to every division of the system. The story of force and rank reduction that comes from the Burlington is beginning to filter in from every system in the middle west. It is a week or more old on the Union Pacific, although the reduction process there is still working; the Santa Fe has been doing the same thing in about the same way during the past ten days; the Rock Island has been trying to reduce the number of working days to a point where a large force could be kept but it is understood that it has encountered opposition from the men who have insisted on agreements as working time being lived up to. The railroad officials say they have been forced to make wholesale reductions where change of working conditions would have been much more to their liking and would have kept more men at work.

This is the way a railroad official expresses it: "The money spent for labor not performed is what is hurting the railroads. Recently it was reported that Chicago Great Western employees at a certain point were detained by a late train, twenty minutes after quitting time, to get their pay checks. They put in a claim for overtime for being detained waiting for their checks. On the Santa Fe in a shop center thirty-four cases of overtime were investigated, where the time actually worked was 46.2 hours. The men were actually paid for 170 hours overtime. Six men working on an engine on the Omaha road worked an hour and a half overtime each. They were paid each for five and one-half hours overtime. That made nine hours work for which they were paid thirty-three hours overtime. It is just such cases as these, brought about by the national agreement wrought under government control, that has put the roads up against it.

"The interstate commerce commission can give no relief. Further increases in rates will work an injury to the business of the country."

TRAINS 39 AND 40 TO BE TAKEN OFF SUNDAY NEXT

Burlington officials announce that beginning next Sunday, passenger trains Nos. 39 and 40 will be taken off. The traffic between Alliance and Seneca will be handled by trains 43 and 44, which will make all stops between those two points.

This announcement will be received with pleasure by some of the smaller towns along the route, which have been protesting bitterly because the "stub" trains do not give them as good service as the through trains. In Alliance, the change will not meet with so much favor.

The action was taken following a conference of rail officials in Alliance several days ago, at which time ways and means of reducing operating expenses were discussed.
