COMMENT & DISCOMMENT

It's isn't likely, of course, that the conductor of this interesting column will ever have enough money to enable him to sit in the seat of the scornful or make the race for the city council under the manager plan, where, we are told, the chief qualification should be that a man should be a guy with a bank account, or the owner of lands and lots and property. But there are times when we should rather like it. The position of a rich man is so peculiarly peculiar these days, if you get what we mean. The fact that we have a newspaper to work at and play with makes our opinions fairly weighty, of course, but if we had a bank account of a quarter of a million, we are quite sure that every single word we wrote would be valued at thirty or forty cents, and the entire western half of Nebraska would read our remarks with a new and kinder interest.

At least, that is the way it works out in other cases, and there is no reason why it shouldn't with us. Our eye this week fell upon a story concerning John D. Rockefeller jr. John, from what we have heard of him, was a nice boy and all his life has been trying to live down the fact that his father had lots of money. He has held positions of trust as a teacher in a Bible class, and while many of his ideas, coming from a man with less money, would have received the merry ha ha from press, pulpit and populace, coming from John, jr., they have been received without raucous laughter and in some places with marked deference.

About the richest thing John jr., ever attempted was to analyze the Colorado coal strike. His articles on the brotherhood of man and the implied fatherhood of God must have been exceedingly interesting to those miners. We would have given our last two-bit piece to have been present at a strike conference, provided John jr., spoke as he wrote. In fact, the only good point about the Rockefeller scion, aside from his money, which will pass anywhere, has been the fact that he didn't join with Henry Ford in the peace ship mission.

John, jr., has been interviewed again and has given a lot of valuable advice on the selection of a wife. Now, if our memory doesn't fail us, John has not yet selected his own, but this doesn't disqualify him from giving advice on a topic of this sort. Of course not. Hasn't the state legislature been listening with respect to the opinions of a dozen childless child welfare experts? Why object to John, jr., advising you how to select a wife, then?

Even if John, jr., has slipped one over on us and succeeded in getting married while we were in the service and couldn't guide him, that really doesn't give him any room to advise. Lots of other men have had one wife, and others have had several, and the fellows with the most experience are the first ones to admit that they know less and less about the subject. Only the arrogant rich can step in where husbands and angels fear to tread, and spill a column or two of advice on a subject about which their knowledge is limited, to say the least.

It is risky for a man to marry a woman of a different nationality or of a different religion, according to John, jr. No man, he said, should let his heart alone guide him when he decides to choose a wife, but he should also be guided by his head. These sentiments were expressed by Mr. Rockefeller before the Young Men's Bible class of the Fifth Avenue Baptist church, of which he is honorary president. The Sunday school lesson was on the life of Samson, and Mr. Rockefeller blamed Samson's marriage with a woman of the Philistines for his failure in life.

"We might well pause here to discuss the importance of any man of the selection of his wife," said Mr. Rockefeller. Regarding the failure of many men to exercise enough care in the selection of their wives, he said: "We may well assume that is the reason why the divorce courts of the lands are so shamefully full."

"There are few things so important as the selection of a wife," continued Mr. Rockefeller. "How many of us have seen the lives of our friends wrecked because they have not selected the right woman."

"It is a pretty dangerous thing in selecting your wife to choose one from a foreign nation, though there are cases where it has not proved a failure. It is a risky thing, too, to yoke oneself for life with a woman of another religion. Once in a while this goes all right, but often it does not."

"It seems to me that in the selection of a life partner the heart and head should be used. I am saying that any man is foolish who lets his heart run away with his head in selecting a wife. A man should sit down and prayerfully consider how that woman and he will agree."

"Who can but look with scorn upon any choice of a wife for anything but happiness and love? There is nothing more disastrous than a marriage for money or social position. It seems to me the more points of interest between husband and wife the surer there will be happiness.

All this is undoubtedly interesting, coming from such a noble source, but has John, jr., really added anything to the sum total of human knowledge of a most fascinating subject? We doubt it. Undoubtedly some good Americans who have been figuring on mating with Zulu maidens will be dissuaded, but somehow or other, our idea is that if a man plans one of these amazing marriages, he will get what he deserves. In fact, he'll get just that, no matter whom he marries.

Over in the colored quarters of Camp Joseph E. Johnston, Florida, during the war, a big unbleached sergeant was telling his outfit that a new major general was taking command and would probably pay them a visit. "Don't none of you boys git frustrated if he axes you questions," he encouraged. "You buck privates jest gotta remember you and de gin-ral is fifty-fifty. AT THE MOVIES

Charles Chaplin in "The Kid," the comedy that took a year to make, will be shown at the Imperial tonight for the second and last time. Big crowds laughed themselves hoarse at it last night, and there will be more of them this evening. It would be unfair to give any idea of the plot of the play, but one thing may be mentioned—and that is that some of the welfare workers clustering around the state house at Lincoln have objected to one portion of it. No, it isn't a scene such as you think, but concerns a small boy who has been hired to break windlights so his boss can fix them. The welfare workers say there has been a regular epidemic of window breaking since the play was shown there.

"The Golden Trail," with Miss Jane Novak, is scheduled for Saturday. Miss Novak first plays the role of the most popular girl in the college town, and later appears as the fero dealer of a notorious dance hall in Alaska. One of the features of the production is a splendidly fought football game which was staged especially for the play by one of the Oregon universities. The plot terminates in a hand-to-hand fight on one of the highest snow-covered peaks that could be found.

Mary Miles Minter in "Sweet Lavender," from the play by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, is the Sunday feature. It is "puppy" love, with its strange shyness, its foolish raptures, its mad vows, and its dogged loyalty, that makes the old play, "Sweet Lavender" forever appealing. It is the story of a college boy and his landlady's daughter, youngsters both of them, and lovers from their first meeting, at which Lavender berated the astonished youth like an angry little wet hen. A fiery little pepper box was Lavender, in spite of her gentle name, and Clem could no more resist her youthful appeal than he could have stopped breathing.

"The Mad Marriage," is the Monday attraction, and Carmel Myers makes a very attractive leading lady. The star appears as a girl who makes her living by looking after the domestic comforts of a group of artists who are too engrossed in their art to think of food and clothes. One of her clients is Jerry Paxton, whose success in art is being assured by the patronage of an excessively rich and utterly idle set of society women. Jerry is pestered by women who want him for a son-in-law. Only by eternal vigilance does he remain a bachelor. When he marries Cinderella Jane to save himself from more irksome matrimonial entanglements, the story has reached a stage where no one knows what is going to happen next.

PROFITEERING

"I suppose you marry a lot of eloping couples, squire. Quite a source of income, eh?"
 "Yes; I git $5 for marryin' each couple an' they come in such darned haste I allus fine 'em $10 more for speedin'."—Boston Transcript.
