USUAL SHORT SUBJECTS

THE PARSON'S CORNER

By Rev. B. J. Minort, Pastor of the First Baptist Church, Alliance

When young, the writer was visiting a family who owned a parrot. They also had a very beautiful daughter. She and I were sitting on the veranda one cool evening, and the question of the danger of kissing came up for discussion. The press at that time was full of the scientific (so-called) proof of the deadly nature of the kiss. In the course of the conversation I said: "Let me convince you that kissing is dangerous." The parrot at once set up a screech: "Let me kiss you, let me kiss you, let me kiss you," and of course the whole family ran out to see the reason of all this excitement. How did I feel? Well, I didn't feel very much like kissing by any means.

But why tell this incident? Because we wish to draw some lesson from this parrot, as we did last week from the goat. There is hardly a thing in this world but has a very valuable lesson for the one who will look for it. But to me the parrot is one of the most useless birds imaginable. It would not be so bad if he repeated what he heard; but often he repeats what he thinks he hears, as in the case above, and there is where the mischief is done.

Now, we have people who are very much like parrots. No sooner do they hear something that tends to cast reflection on someone than they run with breakneck speed to tell someone else.

These human parrots are responsible for much of the heartaches and broken homes that this world is cursed with. We had an instance of this recently in the regard to our high school children being affected with venereal diseases. The originator of this base slander no doubt thought he or she heard a whisper, and like the parrot above, he repeated what he thought he heard with the result that at least in one case a young lady was taken out of school by her mother. Mothers have been kept awake at nights worrying about their boys and girls—believing in their purity, yet fearful that conditions were not as clean as they thought and hoped.

The faculty of the school should be complimented on their prompt action and the way they took the matter up. The writer was told by an official of the school that the story was believed by him, coming as it did from one who was supposed to speak with authority. Now it is hinted that this man who was supposed to know has been proven a liar. Why not divulge his name? If this would have happened, and been fabricated by one of the less prominent persons of town, would the name be kept secret? Shall this be whitewashed, or washed white? Not a few believe that there is an effort to cover up someone?

Any man or woman who would start such a base report about our school deserves to be treated with pitiless publicity, and if it is a prominent person, and one with authority, then the danger is greater than if it were one of no prominence.

What proof have we that this same human immoral vulture will not attack our own son or daughter next? If it is true that the school board has secured a confession from that party that he knew not what he was talking about, then the school board owes it to the parents of the school children to divulge this party's name, that the people may know who to shun. Not a few believe that it is a member of one of the professions. Then in justice to this profession, and the public that must patronize it, the name should be given to the public.

There is no room for, or excuse for shielding a person who will do what that party, we are told, acknowledged it. It is true that there is no law whereby he can be prosecuted as he did not mention the name of any specific pupil; but there is another law more correctional than any thing else—the law of public opinion. Let us not do this job in a half-way manner; let us make a real work of it and punish this scandalmonger with pitiless publicity. No home is safe, no boy or girl's character is safe as long as this snake remains hidden. Point him out and then we will be able to defend ourselves; but let the enemy be hidden and we never know what will be his next move.

We believe that the men who know the name of the originator of this base slander owe it to the public to show him up, thus setting an example to others that none may do this diabolic work without punishment.

ON THE ROAD WITH THE HERALD TRAVELER

Along about the time that we began to tighten our belt and look at the sun to see what time it was, we came to a large stone house and stopped and found D. W. Boag planting corn, and we had a very nice visit with him and found that he was from our own county of Hamilton. We also learned that the farm belonged to Jesse Miller of the Alliance hotel, where we have been so sumptuously fed for the past week and we can readily understand why everything tastes so good. It is because he gets fresh eggs, the best of milk, fresh vegetables, chickens and everything fresh from the farm. Mr. Miller has six hundred and forty acres of fine land and is making good use of it, as he has a very fine herd of Holstein cows, large flocks of hens, and the best of buildings in which to house them. He is planting thirty acres of potatoes and fifteen acres of garden of all kinds so his guests will not want for the very best. Here are some of the things that came from the farm in the last few weeks: Thirty-five hogs, two hives, two calves, three hundred and forty-five hens and from twenty-five to thirty gallons of milk and cream every day. Some place to stop, believe me.

From Boag's to W. A. Cowan's was our next move where we found Mr. Cowan at leisure long enough to give us a few minutes of his time. He came here from Iowa twelve years ago and bought five hundred and sixty acres of land that did not have a stick on it, but now has it nicely improved and is farming extensively. He raises from one hundred to one hundred and fifty hogs per year. He keeps all pure bred but does not keep the papers. He also runs from fifty to sixty cattle and has sixty acres of alfalfa that does well. We asked him what he thought about potatoes as a crop here and he said if one was not too far from town is was one of the best crops one could raise, as he had raised as high as 240 bushels per acre.

One of the old timers we met was Wm. Sherlock, who homesteaded here in 1885 and owns the land to this day along with eight hundred other acres. When he came to this county he was so poor he could not get away so had to stay and today he is independent. He tells us of hauling wood seventy miles and taking seven days to make one trip. Talk about hard times—we think that was the limit. He does not believe in putting all his eggs in one basket, so he farms corn, wheat, hogs and cattle. He told us that the best wheat he ever raised was planted on the twelfth day of May and made twenty-seven bushels per acre.

E. G. Engelhorn was another old-timer who lives on the road to Scottsbluff on his homestead with many other acres added. He is farming 150 acres of land and pastures the balance with the exception of 115 acres of alfalfa. That is some hay. He also raises from seventy-five to a hundred hogs per year and keeps about 125 cattle. He lives one mile south and six and one-half miles west of town.

SHE WAS ALMOST A NERVOUS WRECK

Mother of Six Little Ones Was in Terrible State of Health Before She Got Tanlac

"I am so glad to see how perfectly my health is being restored that I feel like telling everybody about Tanlac," said Mrs. Gust Linden, of 109 Star Avenue, Burlington, Iowa.

"I have six little ones at my house and before my health gave way their prattle and play was like music to me. But for the past twelve months or so I was in such a nervous, run-down condition that the least noise annoyed me terribly. In fact, I was almost a nervous wreck and my household, with the care of my children, was more than I could stand.

"Everything I ate disagreed with me and after eating I would bloat all up with gas and have terrible pains in my stomach and back and around my heart. If I had not found Tanlac I don't believe I could have endured life much longer.

"Right after I started on Tanlac I had less trouble with my stomach and have gained ten pounds in weight already. My nerves are getting down to normal and I am sleeping much better, the gas and bloating are gone and I am so much improved in every way that I feel sure a few more bottles of Tanlac will have me enjoying the best of health."

How you can measure tire value in 1921

OFTEN it's surprising the number of different tire views that come out in a chance talk at the curb or in the leisure of a friend's garage.

Almost every day you come across the man human enough to believe he can outguess the cut-price tag on "job-lots," "discontinued lines" and "surplus stocks."

His opposite is the hard-pan car owner who sticks year in and year out to a standard brand as the only rational economy.

Many will remember the scarcity of U. S. Tires last year.

A hardship at the time, but a benefit now. There are no U. S. Tires to be worked off—no accumulations—no forced selling of any U. S. brand—no shipping of tires from one part of the country to another to "find a market."

There are 92 U. S. Factory Branches. Each one gets its share of U. S. Tires. There is a broad, constant, even distribution of U. S. Tires always going on from these Branches to the dealer.

Buy a U. S. Tire anywhere—in a community of 500 people or even less—and you get a fresh, live tire of current production—with all the original service and mileage the factory put into it.

The owner of a medium or light-weight car stands on equal ground with every other car owner.
