RANDOM SHOTS

NEVER AGAIN.

Whereas, We doled up in our navy uniform on the evening of Armistice day to please the chairman of the Legion dance committee, several ex-soldiers and one ex-gob, as well as to give other natives a treat (and it should have done so, for Beda Thara herself never wore any clothing that was skin-tighter); and

Whereas, We discovered that it took us seventeen minutes to don the aforesaid uniform, as compared with three minutes in the days when we wore it every day and many of the nights; and

Whereas, The evidence is complete that we have outgrown said uniform, which bulges in entirely too many places; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we lay it away reverently in mothballs and the family cedar chest, until such time as we get back to normal weight or the head of the household decides to put in a sufficient number of gussets and extensions to make it comfortable; and be it further

Resolved, That on Memorial day, Armistice day, the Fourth of July and other patriotic occasions, we remove said uniform from its refuge and drop three tears upon it, or more if we can squeeze them out.

This resolution is prepared in advance of New Year's day, and Bradbury, Joe Williams, Jimmy Burlington, Dr. Morris, Windham and others who had to use shoe horns to get into their uniforms last Saturday are welcome to make use of the idea.

Now that we've got our growth, we have regretfully concluded that the only article of clothing that fits us ready-made is a cigarette.

At the minute Sheriff Miller was closing the front door of the Morgan grocery, the milkman was unloading a supply of milk and cream at the rear door. He discovered the sad fact too late, and started to take out what he had just lugged in. Sheriff Miller stopped him. In vain did the milkman protest that he had just brought the stuff—the hard hearted sheriff insisted that it was inside when the place was closed and that it would stay right there. "All right," said the milkman, "all right, if you insist on it." And then, as he climbed into his wagon, he added, "It's half water, anyway."

THE COLUMN STRETCHER.

(From the Norfolk Press.)

"Mortal man never seems happy unless striving for the unattainable. For centuries the alchemist has wasted his life in the attempt to make gold from the baser metals without success. For many years the inventor has tried his hand on perpetual motion and up to the time of going to press has not succeeded in making a motor that will note. The railroad man's specialty is the attempt to have two trains use the same crossing at the same time. The last case of this kind happened Tuesday noon when—"

A BOLD HUNTER.

Lecturer (in loud voice): "I venture to assert there isn't a man in this audience who has ever done anything to prevent the destruction of our vast forests."

Man in the audience (timidly): "I've shot woodpeckers."

There are two kinds of men, those who do what their wives tell them, and those who never marry.

We're not naturally suspicious, but when we see four likely looking young men carrying a long red scratch on the right cheek we begin to wonder idly if they're all calling on the same girl.

With home manicure sets selling as low as two bits, there's no excuse for wearing 'em long these days. A hat-pin provides much better protection, anyway.

The story drifts in from the fillum lots in Hollywood, Cal., of an old gentleman, hired as an extra, who kept wandering out of the picture and bumping into the camera. "What's the matter with you? Have you lost your mind?" yowled the director. "Mebbe," said the old man, and then he added thoughtfully, "But I don't miss it none."

The Anson H. Bigelow who signs the call for the new political party is the same A. H. Bigelow who once was at the head of Aurora schools and who had the writer print for him a book. He then stood high in the Knights of Labor and presumably would deal honestly and squarely with men who labored for him. That was nearly thirty years ago, and at that time he was much better able than we to stand the load. He has since held important positions but he has never paid the debt.

He still talks as nice about labor and the rights of labor as he did when a young man, but the hard labor we did for him was never recompensed and he has never even paid for the material that we paid cash for. Do you wonder that we are somewhat loth to enlist under his leadership to improve political or any other conditions in Nebraska.

The Hay Springs Improvement club, which is a sort of a youthful chamber of commerce, received a setback last week. A committee of twelve members, armed with spades, shovels and other tools, started out to construct a dam across Hay Springs creek, the object being to turn the water from the creek into the Alkali lake and feed the fishes. The club neglected, however, to consult the owner of the land as to the proposed improvement, and he appeared with a shotgun and ordered them off. They stood not on the order of their going, but went at once.

There's a lesson here for all reformers, if they feel like looking for it.

Even with fair indications of oil production, the chances in the west of wildcat oil wells run about one out of twenty-five. If some wealthy syndicate offers to drill a well on your place, let them hop to it, provided you are protected, but let the fellows spend the money who can afford to lose if it don't pan out.

Funny that a wealthy syndicate would have to advertise for an opportunity to erect an oil well on a liberal royalty basis, isn't it? One would think all they'd have to do would be to select their location and put it up to the owner of the land. He'd be an everlasting chump to turn anything down that sounds as good as that does.

But maybe the best locations in the wildkitty oil game are those chosen in this way.

All of us, as Lydia Pinkham used to say, have our little superstitions.

Today's Best Story.

There hasn't been one worthy of the title for a month. If you hear of a good one, pass it along and rescue a perishing editor.

Wonder what's happened to our little playmate from Bridgeport, Abe Martin the Tooth.

Dr. Weyrens Talks to High Students on "Tuberculosis"

At the high school auditorium last Wednesday morning Dr. J. P. Weyrens addressed the students on the subject of "Tuberculosis." He took up the history of the disease stating that through the ages enormous numbers of deaths occurred from the disease but still no one knew what the cause of the trouble was. It was in 1882 that Dr. Robert Koch of Berlin discovered the bacillus tuberculosis, the cause of tuberculosis. From this date on great strides were made in the prevention and cure of the disease.

He stated that the number of adults who have had tuberculosis some time or another during their lives is much higher than is generally supposed. He stated that from 70 and 80 per cent of all persons beyond thirty years of age have had the disease and that all but a comparatively small number have been cured by their own resistance and most of them never knew that they had the disease.

He pointed out that the things which prevent and cure tuberculosis are fresh air, good food and regular hours for rest and that drugs are practically of no value as far as curing or preventing the disease is concerned.

He stated that tuberculosis cannot be inherited, but that a weak constitution may be inherited and that if these weak individuals unduly spend their energy, it might be easy for the germs of tuberculosis to infect them and eventually destroy them.
