INGRATITUDE

Bishop Pennington was talking in Boston about charity. "Some charities," he said, "remind me of the cold, proud, beautiful woman who, glittering with diamonds, swept forth from a charity ball at dawn, crossed the frosty sidewalk and entered her huge limousine. A beggar woman whined at the window, 'Could you give me a trifle for a cup of coffee, lady?' The woman looked at the beggar reproachfully. 'Good gracious!' she said, 'Here you have the nerve to ask me for money when I've been troubling for you the whole night through! Home, James!'"

OPTIMISM AND PESSIMISM

Colonel George Harvey was discussing the outlook at a farewell dinner. "We must consider the outlook fairly and squarely," he said. "We must get at the truth. Optimism is no good. Pessimism is no good, either. Both make for inaction. The truth alone works." The optimist, Colonel Harvey added, "orders a dozen oysters and expects to find pearls in them. The pessimist expects to find typhoid fever germs."

Say Beef Feeding Pays Better Than Selling the Grain

An investigation into methods and costs of beef production in the Corn Belt, conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture covering 3 years, and 906 farms, shows interesting facts concerning the present status of the industry. The man who feeds cattle is marketing his crops as he feeds them, and, therefore, is justified in expecting a return equivalent to average market prices for the feeds. Even if he sometimes falls short of such a return, he has not necessarily experienced a loss. The Corn Belt farmer who sells grain sometimes receives more for his crop than the one who feeds it to cattle, but on the average, for a period of years, except in certain limited areas, the man who puts the feed into steers and returns the manure to the land is the one who comes out ahead. The conclusion is based on feeding in Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, Nebraska and Missouri. The figures which contain the results of this investigation were obtained from a large number of farms and from several agricultural experiment stations in the middle west. One phase of the work deals with the cost of maintaining a herd of breeding cows for producing feeder cattle. It was found that feed represented 69 per cent of the cost of keeping a cow for one year, while the other 31 per cent was for interest, labor, equipment, and incidentals.

Protests Against Sunday Closing of Rural Postoffices

The order of the postmaster general closing rural postoffices on Sunday, thereby preventing rural route patrons from receiving their mail by calling at the post office, is protested by H. D. Lute, secretary of the Nebraska Farm Bureau federation, in a letter to Postmaster General Hays. "The farmers like to get their Sunday papers on Sunday as that is their day of leisure, instead of getting them on Monday when they have no time to read," Mr. Lute writes. "We feel that the former is entitled to the same consideration as the man in the city, who can go to the postoffice and get his mail on Sunday by calling for it."

A similar letter has been sent to members of the Nebraska delegation in congress.

Nearly 28,000 Miles of Good Roads Were Built During 1921

Road building has recovered from the setback received during the war, and prospects are bright for the future. Approximately 14,000 miles of road have been constructed during the present season by the State in conjunction with Federal aid, according to the Bureau of Public Roads, United States Department of Agriculture, and probably an equal amount independent of Federal aid. More miles of improved road have been built than during any other year.

Costs of road grading and construction with local materials is down practically to the 1914 level. Some reductions, also, have been made in freight rates on road materials. The importance of this item is shown by the fact that in some cases it has been estimated that increased freight rates have added 10 per cent to the cost of a road. Prices of manufactured road materials tend downward; the present level is materially lower than that of a year ago.

With the new appropriation by congress of $75,000,000, added impetus will be given to new road construction. Many of the states are considering enlarged amounts of state aid, and the new law will have a tendency to encourage this policy. It will also secure the construction of a system of interstate and intercounty highways, rather than haphazard selection of roads as in some cases in the past. The meeting of the Association of State Highway officials to be held in Omaha, December 5 to 12, will be devoted largely to the discussion of ways and means of complying with the new law and getting construction underway.

VACCINATION VS. UNDERSTANDING

Between 1915 and 1920 the number of smallpox cases per 100,000 population increased eightfold in the three Pacific coast states. During this period there occurred in these states a general relaxation in the compulsory vaccination on law for school children.

In 1920, according to the United States public health service, the number of smallpox cases in four North Atlantic states did not exceed 3 per 100,000 population. In these states there is a large foreign-born industrial population whose standards of personal hygiene and cleanliness do not crowd the altitude record. In the three Pacific coast states, containing perhaps the smallest amount of slums, poverty and unsanitary dwellings, the highest standard of living and of average intelligence of any area of similar size in the country, the number of smallpox cases per 100,000 inhabitants climbed to 113.

The Atlantic states continued to enforce the compulsory vaccination laws; vaccine states practically abolished them under pressure from numerous anti-vaccination societies.

In Jenner's days vaccination was opposed on the ground that the inoculation of children with vaccine would cause the growth of rudimentary horns, hoofs and tails and give the youngsters other bovine traits. Has our mass intelligence really progressed very far in the last century and a quarter?—Sunset.
