 Yesterday morning when driving a horse, attached to a light buggy, on north Locust street, Mrs. Lem Steel and little daughter, experienced a mishap that they will remember for some time to come. The animal became frightened and dashed down the street at a frightful gait. The driver lost all control of the horse after it crossed the tracks but it was brought to a standstill by the buggy colliding with one of the many hitching posts along the street. The occupants were thrown about ten feet over the dash board, but they escaped with a few slight bruises on the face and an unmerciful shaking up. The buggy and harness did not fare so well, however, and were taken to Carrier's blacksmith shop for repairs.
