During the long run of "A Knight for a Day" in Chicago—a solid year—the young women of the chorus became known as the "American Beauty Chorus," because of the natural charms of its members. It is seldom that the management of a compelling attraction lays special stress upon the hard working girls who form the animated background of a musical play, but those having in charge the publicity work for "A Knight for a Day" evidently wish it to be known that the young ladies with the organization which comes to The Keith next Friday are uncommonly good to look upon.

In the morning he got up and called his two daughters, saying he was not feeling well. He returned to bed, and became unconscious. A physician was sent for, but he could not be aroused from the stupor, and died with out regaining consciousness. The deceased was the father of Tim Lake, of this city.

"A Knight for a Day."

With a scenic environment pictorially and electrically easily one of the most elaborate and tasteful ever seen upon the local stage, "A Knight for a Day" comes to the Keith Theatre Friday, March 12th. It has been declared to be one of the merriest and most tuneful musical plays produced within memory. It will be remembered that this work ran for a solid year at the Whitney opera house in Chicago, and that it subsequently ran for five months at Wallack's Theatre in New York and almost as long at the Tremont in Boston. The organization which is this season headed by Eugene Moulton and Miss Elsie Herbert, is returning from a tour of the principal cities of the Pacific coast, where it has been praised as quite the best musical play seen out that way in many years. Perhaps more by the music than the book, the success of this play may be said to have been earned. The score comprehends nearly a dozen genuine song successes, and the ensembles have a rhythm and swing that singularly enhance their melody.
