TUESDAY, MARCH 21, 1911.

The republicans and democrats "got together" on candidates for city offices, with one exception, and as between those two parties there will be no opposition. This is generally considered as the proper action. In city affairs each property owner has a personal interest, and the interest of one is the interest of all. We want municipal affairs conservatively managed, yet with that spirit of progressiveness which the growth of the city demands. The one important matter before the city is a settlement of the waterworks problem. Under the administration of Mayor Patterson excellent headway has been made with this question, which for several years has been a most vexatious one. As pointed out in Mr. Patterson's letter in Friday's issue, the progress made has been through non-partisan efforts—politicians have been eschewed and the mayor and councilmen have worked together in harmony for the best interests of the city. It is still for the best interests of the city that the men who began the settlement of the waterworks question be allowed to complete the work, and this particularly applies to Mayor Patterson, who is thoroughly conversant with every move and has well formed ideas as to procedure in the future. Assisted by the councilmen and other city officials, the administration of Mayor Patterson for two years has been one of progressiveness but not extravagance. City affairs are in good shape throughout and the work of the Mayor and those other officials who are candidates for re-election entitles him and them to the votes of all those who desire future good management of city affairs.

The Roosevelt Dam.

Theodore Roosevelt took part Friday in the opening of the Roosevelt dam, one of the great engineering works projected during his administration and authorized largely because of his vigor, foresight and persistence. It adds not a little to the glamor of the Roosevelt name to see this man while still in the full strength of his manhood watching the completion of projects of the first importance that were set on foot years ago while he was in the white house. When the Panama canal is opened this part of his career will reach its climax. But picturesque and world renowned as that event will be the reclamation of a large area of desert lands through irrigation projects financed and managed by the federal government will in fact be of as much value to the country, especially to those of us who live neighbors to the semi arid states.

This Arizona dam is not the highest nor the longest among the reclamation projects, but it is the keystone of a great irrigation enterprise. It will hold back flood waters sufficient for the irrigation of a quarter of a million acres of land in a region where every acre will be able to do more than double duty because of the warmth of the climate and the generosity of the soil.

This dam has been a little more than seven years in building. It is 254 feet high and 1,080 feet long. It creates a reservoir twenty-five miles long and 5 1/2 feet deep—enough water to cover the state of Delaware one foot in depth. This work will stand for ages as a monument to the era in our national development in which such enterprises were made possible.—State Journal.

Cutting up the Farms.

Not in the immediate future will the United States have to go abroad for its supplies of farm products, for its has too much fertile soil of its own that has never been scratched by cultivation. It has room for millions and millions of population out in its vast western states, which have only beguiled the work of colonization. Census figures, as they are gradually working out, show encouraging progress in this direction. They show a larger number of farms in most of the states, although in Iowa there are fewer farms than there were ten years ago, indicating that the Iowa farms are larger.

Montana presents an interesting situation, however, and it is probably typical of most other western states, with which, of course, Iowa is not to be classed. Ten years ago Montana had 13,370 farms, while now it has 25,946. That is not a great many farms for a state of Montana's dimensions. It is 580 miles in width and 315 miles deep, giving it an area of 146,080 square miles. It is the third state in the union in point of size. Texas and California surpassing it. We find, therefore, that this great state has scarcely begun to develop. What a kingdom of wealth and population it, like Nebraska, Texas and other huge western states, will become when somewhere near fully developed may be only approximated from what they are now.

In 1900 the average size of Montana's farms was 624 acres. In 1910 it was 250 acres. There is the process of colonization that is going on more or less all over the west and will go on steadily for years to come. It means the opening up of the most fertile soil, the establishment of new homes, new sources of food supply and the production of new wealth.—Omaha Bee

Obituary.

Walter K. Coville, whose funeral was held Friday, was born March 15, 1844, at Vienna, N. Y., and died on his sixty-seventh birthday. His boyhood days were spent on his father's farm, and at the age of nineteen he enlisted in Battery H, Third New York Artillery, with which he served three years and one month, being honorably discharged in the field in Virginia December 18th, 1864. On January 11th, 1867, he was united in marriage to Francis Kenyon and shortly after moved to Wisconsin. In April, 1872, he came to North Platte with a company of men and their families who organized as a colony, and was among the first settlers on the north side of the river. Afterwards Mr. Coville entered the employ of the Union Pacific and continued in the service for fifteen years. About twenty years ago he moved with his family to a farm north of town and lived there up to the time of his death. For several years he had lived a retired life on account of ill-health, but took a great interest in all things pertaining to North Platte and vicinity, being personally acquainted with all of the older citizens.

Whenever I am suffering from these troubles, I appeal to Doan's Kidney Pills and their use gives me relief. Other members of my family have taken Doan's Kidney Pills with excellent results."
