"Well, I hope, for your own sake, you are allowed to give drinks for nothing," was the reply, and the small man stalked to the door, followed by his greatly subdued companion.

The bartender considered for a moment, and then crawled over the bar and went after them.

"I suppose I must take it the way you say," he said. visitors he never failed to write a certain quantity of MSS, per diem. man, I think an out-door servant, came in every morning to light his library-fire and prepare his coffee. 'And so,' he said, 'I am in my chair at 5, and I write till 9, and then my day's work is done. I hereupon demurred that he must pay the penalty of going to bed very early; to which he replied that, whether at home or in society he invariably said good night at 9 o'clock. His habits would seem to have changed during these last years and I "Then take it," said the small man, throw-ing two dimes on the floor. And thank your stars that you can get it." The bartender picked up the coins, gave them to the cashier, and went back to his place.

"I made a mistake," he said, confidentially, to his first customer. It is a little one who has a will of his own and the big one whom have changed during these last years, and I have read with surprise in some of the society notices that he had returned to London ety notices that he had returned to London life and London ways, and become a 'genial diner-out.' Big and burly, with iron-gray hair and beard, and a broad, weather-beaten face, he looked far more like a hearty conntry squire than like a literary man and an ex-post office secretary. His voice, too, was big and burly, like himself. I used to hear it echoing down the lengthy gallery that led to my library, long before he made his appearance at the door. He enjoyed the enviable facility with which he composed, and loved to tell of the easy way in which his love stories ran off the end of his pen. 'I'm such a useful fellow,' he said, one day. 'I can write to a given space, and fill it exactly; and if at any time another dozen, lines are wanted. I simply write them. It's all as easy as possible to me. I measure it out like tape!'

"I knew Louis Blanc more intimately than I ever knew Trollope. Not only was I constantly meeting him in society during many years, but he was the ami du maison of my nearest and dearest friends. I can not realize the little Courted Her Like $900.

There was a man named Watkins in a Confederate regiment during the war, who was well on toward middle life; but when his wife came to camp one day she seemed to make him young by comparison. There seemed to be a century's difference between them; and the man, who was as ugly as a Georgia cracker usually is, was handsome beside his wife. usually is, was handsome beside his wife.

"How did you ever come to marry such an old witch as that?" asked one of his superior officers, taking him aside. "Well, you see," said the man, rather sheepishly, "her mother kept a little grocery store down on the corner of the street where I lived, and I used to go in there to get what I wanted to eat. One day I found the old woman's ugly daughter all alone in the store. Just as I came in I heard the clink of silver through the loose rafters overhead, and the old woman counting: "One, two, three, and so on. I sat down and made love to the girl and the old woman up-stairs kept on counting. By-and-by she was away up in the hundreds—four hundred, four hundred and fifty, five hundred, I courted that girl harder and harder as the old woman got higher. Finally she stopped at nine hundred dollars!" "Beloved Sukey, will you be mine?" but he was the ami du maison of my nearest and dearest friends. I can not realize the little man with snow-white hair described the other day by the Paris correspondent of The Times. His hair, when I knew him, was raven black, and his clean-shaved chin and jaw were almost blue. Add to these a rich brown southern complexion, a ruddy cheek, lustrous black eves, a slightly aquiline cast of features, a splendid head and brow, and you have in words the portrait of a remarkably handsome man. Finally, you must set that spirited head upon a tiny but admirably proportioned figure just five feet high, and fancy you are looking at a colossus through

The insulted patriot drew himself to the uttermost of his small height, flashed one glance at the offender, and turned silently away. I witnessed the episode, and did not envy the perpetrator of the mistake. I have omitted to mention that Reusselaer, Delaware, Columbia and Greene counties refused to pay rents. Mobs and outrages just like those in Ireland and Spain followed. Fenimore Cooper's novel, "Chainrages just like those in Ireland and Spain fol-lowed. Fenimore Cooper's novel, "Chain-Bearer," is on this subject. New landlords, buying old Patroon grants, revived the hard conditions of the old feudal leases. The ten-ants appealed both to force and to politica. Gov. Silas Wright in 1845 addressed the legislathe black silk cravat betrayed no margin of shirt collar; a peculiarity of style which was also characteristic of Mazzini. The legislature passed such acts as the British government has done. Yet a sheriff was soon killed, and the disturbances extended over nearly a fourth -part of New York state. Martial law was declared. Attorney General John Van Buren, prosecuting anti-renters, had a fist fight in court with Lawyer Ambrose Jordan. Two capital convictions were obtained. Yet the anti-renters carried a new constitution beat Wright's re-election with Governor John Young, and he set fifty-four persons free and challenged the validity of Patroon titles. In 1852 the landlords triumphed in the courts, but subsequent decisions declared fendal incidents of sales and leases obsolete by a law of 1787. In brief, the change in the spirit of society compelled landlord reform."

That Little Game of Poker.

Chicago Inter Ocean. That little game of poker at Philadelphia, at which $54,000 in the "I'll see you later" sort of bet was lost, recalls a recent incident here. A game was in progress in the card room of a well known club in this city, with an ante of 10 cents and no limit to the bet. Two players got "broke," but instead of drawing out kept "talking" in and telling the winner that they would owe. Finally one of the two "bet a dollar," which he indicated by a wink at the pot. A player who had become disgusted with that sort of performance promptly said: "I see sort of performance promptly said: "I see your blow, and go it two bladders of wind bet-ter." The effect was reformative.

A Laxy Climate.

How stupid he was! Juliet's tomb in Brempton cemetery, London, had for me a far keener, if melancholy, interest than the socalled tomb of Juliet in Verona. That is known to be a humbug. This has far a better claim to be the tomb of Shakespeare's own Juliet. It is a picture which will linger always in my memory. I see it now, the green grave, the heavy white marble cross and the vivid red and yellow flowers shining through the mist of rain. In your edition of to-day there appears an

and if this Hopkins is the same man who, about twenty years ago, was somewhat popular in music circles in Brooklyn, he must be fully aware of the following facts:

The song "Weeping Sad and Lonely," or "When this Cruel War is Over," was written and composed by Charles Carroll Sawyer, the "C. C. Sawyer" referred to by Mr. Hopkins. Henry Tueler lapted the words to an old sense which is a way composition.

Henry Tuels a lapted the words to an old song which aimed as his own composition, written in 1 , and entitled "Darling Meet Me in the Greenwood." After having a few engraved copies printed, Mr. Sawyer, not liking the melody, withdrew it and entirely reconstructed it; and yet, not wishing to detract any from Mr. Tucker's credit, left the title page as originally written, viz: "Words by Charles Carroll Sawyer. Growing.

Rapid Development of the Agricultural and Manufacturing Interests of the Country ... Bich Soil and a Favored Land.

Correspondence New York Tribune. From the moment of crossing Red river, passing from the Indian territory into the state of Texas, evidences of wealth and prosperity greet the eye. Denison, containing about 9,000 inhabitants, is a distributing point for northwestern Texas, and does a good jobbing trade. The country about it is rapidly filling up with a good class of farmers from the older states, who turn their attention principally to growing cereals and raising tine stock. acreage of winter wheat, oats barley has been increased onethird since last year, and of cotton land about one-fourth. Going south from Denison, numerous small but prosperous towns are passed. The country is well settled, and the farms present a thrifty, well-to-do air. Winter wheat, oats, and barley look finely. Peach trees are in blossom, and nearly every farm house is surrounded by an orchard. Ninety-six miles south of Denison is Fort Worth, a city of 15,750 inhabitants and an important railroad junction. Six years ago Fort Worth contained 1,800 inhabitants, and was an outpost of civilization. Now it has railroads, street-cars, gas works, water-works, cotton compress, flouring, pork packing, and planing mills, a foundry, and other business en-terprises, which mark it as one of the foremost towns in Texas. I can best convey an idea of the business of the place by stating that the different railroads have twenty-seven miles of side tracks in their yards here, and the tracks are core od with cars containing merchandise of every discription. Live stock men from all quarters hold their conventions here and transact their business, and money chang railroad was built. Decatur bids fair to be a place of some note, as coal has been discovered a short distance from there and the Wise County Coal company are developing a thirty-inch vein. This coal will supply a long felt want of Northwestern Texas. The land throughout this section of country is very fertile, fairly wooded, and well watered. What are known as the upper cross-timbers, belts of woodland, traverse this part of Texas from northeast to southwest. The soil is a chocolate colored southwest. The soil is a chocolate colored loam, and the finest staple of cotton Texas produces is grown throughout this section. Wild land is worth from $1,50 to $10 per acre, prices varying with the quality and situation. A very fine body of land can be got from four confine the state of the section of or five miles from a railroad station for $2 per acre, and there is a good market for all kinds of farm produce.

There are four towns tributary to Bowie, four to Henrietta, and Wichita Falls commands the entire trade of the Pan Handle of Texas and the adjacent portion of the Indian territory. The last named place has only been in existence three or four months and it already contains about 2,500 inhabitants, two wholesale grocery stores, two banks and a weekly paper, The Herald. In Fort Worth two daily and weekly papers are published, one weekly at Aurora, two at Decatur, one at Bowie, one at Alvord, one at Henrietta, and one at the Falls. There is great unanimity in politics, as these papers are all Conservative Democratic, but strangers are welcomed from all sections of the country without regard to politics or religion. These towns all possess good educa-tional advantages, the school fund of Texas being large and every county in Texas having been allotted a portion of the public domain set apart and known as school lands.

The entire country is being rapidly fenced up for either stock or agricultural purposes; so much so, in fact, that stock men are finding it impossible to drive cattle, as has been the it impossible to drive cattle, as has been the custom in years past when they were changing ranges, and are now making contracts with railroads to transport their young eattle from the breeding grounds of the southwest to the grazing grounds of southern Colorado, northern Texas and New Mexico, a distance of from 500 to 700 miles. The cattle are held on these grazing lands until they attain their growth and are ready for market, the theory held by stock men being that cattle breed better and are safer and more prolific, in the warm climate of southern Texas, and fatten quicker and grow larger in the northern grazing lands. and grow larger in the northern grazing lands. It is estimated that between 200,000 and 300,000 head of these young cattle will be moved this year.

The number and wealth of the stock men in Texes are something wonderful, Some five or six years ago "Old Dan" Waggoner made a sale of his ranch and brand of cattle for $25,000 to a man who afterward backed out of his bargain. "Old Dan" was about to sue to compel him to keep it, but was dissuaded therefrom, and to-day he has good reason to congratulate himself that the sale was not ef-ected, as he is now offered for the same ranch and brand $1,500,000. and brand $1,500,000.

The counties of Grayson, Tarrant, Denton, Wise, Montague, Cooke and those counties immediately adjoining are known as the Delaware of Texas. Apples, peaches, pears and plums are grown successfully and remuneratively. There are numbers of small tracts of land devoted entirely to fruit, which pay their owners handsomely; one fruit-grower in the neighborhood of Denison clearing $10,000 profit on eighty acres of land planted princi-pally in apples and peaches. The climate and soil seem to be finely adapted to fruit and

A Novel Way of Breaking Metal. St. Louis Republican.

An effectual method of breaking up considerable pieces of iron and steel has come into use as a substitute for the process of melting them by means of colossal air furnacesnamely, the application of the force which confined water exerts in every direction upon the material in which it is enclosed. A round hole, two or three inches in diameter and ten or twelve inches deep, is bored into the mass to be split, the hole being then filled with water and closed by a tight-fitting steel cylinder, upon which the weight is allowed to fall from the usual height. In this way a plate roll some thirty inches in diameter has been split into four or five parts, the pieces flying twenty or thirty feet. A single blow of an ordinary drop weight suffices to split off pieces of thirty to thirty-six inches in diameter. It being essential that the hole be hermetically closed, this is accomplished by hollowing out the base of the steel cylinder into a cup-shaped form, the edges of which are driven against the walls of the hole by the water in its endeavor to get past. A pin of good steel can be used several times in this overor twelve inches deep, is bored into the mass Alexander Stephens on Webster.

I shall never forget my first trip away from nome, nor the impressions it made on me. I was quite a young man, and some business fell into my hands that carried me north. I had never been as far as Washington before, and of course I wanted to see what was there to be seen. I went into the senate gallery and took my seat. I could easily pick out the prominent men by the pictures I had seen of them. Pretty soon a question came up, and the president of the senate announced that Mr. Webster was entitled to the floor. Of course I was very much gratified that I was to hear him. He arose and began speaking in an ordinary conversational way. I think he took his snuff occasionally. He never made a gesture from the time he opened until he closed. I thought it all sound doctrine, but I was convinced that I knew a dozen college boys who wo have beaten him speaking. The next morning I picked up a paper. There was his speech headed: "Mr. Webster's Great Speech on the Finances." Pshaw, I thought, they don't call that a great speech, do they? I saw another paper. There it was again, headed Mr. Webster's great speech on the finances. I went to Baltimore. There they had Mr. Webster's great speech on the finances. I went to Baltimore. There they had Mr. Webster's great speech on the finances. I got to New York. There everything was in a ferment over Mr. Webster's great speech on the finances. I got to New York. There everything was in a ferment over Mr. Webster's great speech on the finances. I got to New York. There everything was in a ferment over Mr. Webster's great speech on the finances. I got to New York. There everything was in a ferment over Mr. Webster's great speech on the finances. I got to New York. There everything was in a ferment over Mr. Webster's great speech on the finances. I was the same way in Boston. So I concluded that it must indeed be a great speech. It put me to thinking, and I made up my mind that it was not the way a man said anything, but what he said made him an orator.

The next morning There Wasn't Any Chaw in the Meat. "We can't stand this sort of meat, sir," said the spokesman of a delegation of the crew of the steamship Louisiana to Capt. Gager on a recent trip.
"What's the matter with the meat?" inquired "What's the matter with the meat?" inquired the captain of the steward.

"Nothing at all, sir. It's a piece of the cabin roast that I was obliged to send down because the stock of meat for the crew ran short. It is fresh, tender meat. Taste it yourself. Capt. Gager tastel it, and said to the spokesman of the delegation:

"I can see nothing the matter with that meat. It is as good as I get, and is very tender."

"Well, sir," said the spokesman, "we don't like it. There's no chaw in it."
