CHICKAMAUGA.
Gen. Longstreet's Account of the Great Battle.

The Turning Point in the Military Fame of Rosecrans—Where Thomas Hood Like a Rock—Folk's Delay—Bragg's Failure After Victory.

Frank A. Burr in Cincinnati Enquirer.

While riding over the field I learned a great deal about the battle from Gen. Longstreet that cannot be found in the books or in the military records. It is the most interesting as well as the most important matter I gathered. This story of Chickamauga would be incomplete without a beginning with the chief and the plans that brought him to this field. Gen. Longstreet said:

"During the latter part of the summer and early fall of 1863 Gen. Lee and I often talked over different plans for an aggressive fall campaign. I urged upon him the reinforcement of Bragg, and the superior chance of winning a decisive victory in the west. He did not appear to be much impressed with my suggestions. I was so much impressed with the idea of making an effort that fell to transfer the battle ground from the east to the west that I wrote a letter to Mr. Sedgwick, secretary of war, giving my views in relation to such a movement. Shortly after this General Lee went to Richmond, and a few days after I received a note from him directing me to get out my readiness for another advance north, and also to have Hill and Ewell's corps prepared for the march. I replied to him that my command was ready, and that I had given the necessary instructions to Hill and Ewell to get their troops and transportation ready. In this letter I renewed the arguments that I had made to him personally against making another campaign into Pennsylvania. The day after I was directed to make a march north, and he was strong enough to move north again, he was strong enough at least to act on the defensive where he was, and spare the reinforcements necessary to win a sweeping victory over Rosecrans. I presented to him the certainty of his having to withdraw from Pennsylvania on account of the lateness of the season, and that he would find himself on Northern soil even if the enemy did not drive him back. I also directed his attention to the fact that Rosecrans was pushing toward Georgia, and if he should succeed in marching through that state the Confederacy would be virtually dead. A few days later I received a note in reply to mine, requesting me to get two divisions of my corps in readiness to move west. General Lee soon returned from Richmond to his headquarters, and we had a long, earnest talk over the effort to be made to force and win a great battle in the west; or I might say to transfer the battle ground of that year from Virginia to Tennessee, and even to the Ohio, if we were as successful as I hoped we would be. I expressed to him great concern lest Bragg should fail to follow my suggestions, and that he might gain. He replied that both President Davis and himself had anticipated this suggestion, and that orders had gone to Bragg that should he win a victory he must follow it up with great vigor. I was at General Lee's headquarters or he at mine every day during the short time it took to get Hood's and McLaws' divisions in readiness to move west. He had decided to send reinforcements to the rear that should he win a victory he must follow it up with great vigor.
