Last evening two juries were out at the same time. The first, on the case of John F. Polk vs. Vancourt and Milcher, was charged the first thing yesterday morning, and as was stated last evening, one of the jurymen, M. Harris was taken sick in the forenoon and remained so all day. At nine o'clock last evening Judge Applegate called them out and on questioning the jury found they stood the same as they had all day—nine to three in favor of defendant—and they seemed to think they couldn't agree. Principally on account of Mr. Harris' illness the judge dismissed the jury, which probably saved them from an all night session. The second jury was on the case of B. & M. R. R. vs. Cass county. They went out about 8:30 last evening and agreed in about an hour, in favor of defendant. The object of the case was to have taxes of several years refunded, on the ground that their bridge and tracks here were not taxable.

W. C. T. U. Concert.

The concert at the M. E. church last evening was a success in every way. The house was well filled with an appreciative audience and the performers did their parts exceedingly well.

The programme commenced by thirty or forty little children marching in and a song "Here we meet as Temperance Children" followed by an address of welcome by Jessie Niles, then Misses Birdie Houseworth and Lottie Russell sang the song entitled "You are breaking Mother's Heart, Tom."

The trials of a school mistress was well illustrated by Miss Anna Russell and Hilton Wescott.

"Our Campaign Song" was well rendered by Misses Mattie Smith, May Sherman, Lottie Cooper and Blanche Kennedy.

Temperance and Intemperance was represented by Misses May Russell and Minnie Houseworth and their subjects.

Eunice Davis gave a recitation "I'm a Little Band of Hope Girl."

Paul Hayes and Hilton Wescott spoke "I'm but a little fellow" and Nanie Pollock, "I'm but a little midget," which was followed by Miss Hattie Dunstone with a song entitled "Cold Water for Me."

The recitation, "The Modern Belle," by Miss Kittie Russell was well spoken, and Miss Jessie Niles did exceedingly well in her character "I've come across the Sea."

Next came a recitation by Miss Hattie Sullivan which was well rendered.

Little Lottie Dunston sang a song "Brave and True" which was well rendered for one so young.

The following three recitations entitled "Little Lips," "The Dead Doll" and "That Little New Bonnet" were by Mina Alexander, little Nanie Pollock and Anna Sullivan.

Wesley Davis then spoke "Old Flash, the Fire Engine Horse," which was followed by Misses Julia and Georgia Oliver with a song entitled "Sweet Dream-land Faces." They were encored and sang another piece entitled "Dreamy Eyes That Haunt Me Still."

"The Drunkard's Wife" was well spoken by Miss Ella Newell, and Miss Ollie Mathews recited "The Mother's Mite" in character impersonating an old lady exceedingly well.

Mrs. H. Niles then sang with a chorus, "A Thousand Years," followed by Mr. W. A. Derrick in a song "The Old Church Bell" which was well rendered and brought forth loud applause. He sang another piece which was well rendered also, then Mr. Seig Green sang a character song entitled, "If a Body Takes his Tody" which was well rendered and well acted. Frozen in Midsummer.

In speaking of the large number of deaths of English sparrows during the late rain-storms, Professor Otto Luggar, of Baltimore, says that, instead of having been dashed to death, he believed they had been frozen in midsummer. One day last week he counted forty sparrow flying stiff and cold within a distance of three squares. He carried eight home, examined all of them and found no bones broken. Four of them he warmed and they revived. The other four never again showed signs of life. Professor Luggar gave the following explanation of the apparent lifelessness after the storm, of the birds, most of which were young ones: In migrating, birds fly against the wind. Should the wind suddenly change and blow in the same direction as the birds are flying, and at a greater rate of speed, the birds' feathers are blown forward, the skin is exposed, and a cold driving rain will soon chill the birds and cause their death. In this way, strange as it may seem, the birds may be said to have been frozen in midsummer.—Boston Transcript.

Outwitting the Alligators.

The dogs of San Domingo discovered a way of outwitting their enemies. Whenever a native dog of the island comes to a stream he stops and barks furiously for some time, until gradually one by one the yacores gather near the bank on which he stands, poking their vicious jaws out of the water as if in expectation of a feast. The dog knows by instinct when he has gathered all the yacores in the vicinity in one spot, and becomes satisfied of this fact he scampers off at breakneck speed up or down the stream and swims across in safety. It is only the San Domingan dog, however, who possesses this instinct. An imported dog would plunge recklessly into the water and soon become the prey of the yacore.—New York Mail and Express.

Oil on the Waves.

In a pamphlet issued lately by the United States hydrographic office, Lieut. Underwood says that mineral oils are not so effective for use at sea as vegetable or animal. A comparatively small amount of the right kind of oil, say two quarts per hour, properly used, is sufficient, he asserts, to prevent much damage, both to vessels and to small boats, in heavy seas. The greatest result from oil is obtained in deep water. In a surf, or where water is breaking on a bar, the effect is not so certain; but even in this case oil may be of benefit, and its use is recommended by Lieut. Underwood. He advises that, when an attempt is about to be made to board a wreck, the approaching vessel should use the oil after running as close as possible under the lee of the wreck. The wreck will soon drift into the oil, and then a boat may be sent alongside of her.—Scientific American.

Vital Parts Well Balanced.

It is a curious fact that persons far from robust often outlive those of extraordinary strength and hardihood. Upon this subject The Canada Health Journal says that the vital parts of the system must be well balanced in order to attain long life, and that excessive strength in one part is a source of danger. Hence an over developed muscular system invites dissolution, because it is a continuous strain on the less powerful organs, and finally wears them out.—Boston Transcript.

A Shabby Sort of Enterprise.

New York city is the recognized headquarters of every description of schemes for the acquisition of wealth without labor. An attorney, whose place of business is in Aldrich court, remarked: "Among the novel projects for making money which I have come across recently is that of speculating in the franchises of interior towns and cities for public improvements. The use of three men in New York will make a raid on some town to obtain a street car franchise, representing themselves backed by immense capital, which is only waiting an opportunity of investment in street car lines. On securing a franchise from the town by such representations they will come back to New York and peddle it out for $500 or $1,000 or whatever they can get for it. The result usually is that the town gets a street car line with a thirty pound T rail built on cross ties, and cheap cars, which look very well when freshly painted. The whole thing is sold out in a hurry and some one gets left, while the town finds a miserable street car line on its hands."

"The same process is being carried on in reference to water works, gas works, electric lighting systems and similar public improvements. There are scores of men in New York who make a living in just such shabby enterprises. There is no way to head them off except for the authorities in the towns and villages of the country to make closer investigation as to the character of the people asking for franchises."—New York Tribune.

A Coachman's Observation.

"I was once coachman for the Duke of— and he had no finer horses than these in all his stables. Service is very different in England from what it is here. One thing strikes me particularly, and that is this: In England you serve 'his lordship,' and when 'his lordship' is not using the horses 'her ladyship' is at liberty to use them. Here it is different. The lady is the one to be considered. For instance, when my present employer engaged me he said: 'William, your duties are not many, but the most important of all will be in consulting and obeying implicitly the wishes of Mrs. Keenan. When you have pleased her your work is complete. You will do exactly as she directs; consult her wishes in everything.' And so it is. If Mrs. Keenan is using the carriage Mr. K. walks or patronizes the horse cars or a cab. The lady is first always. It isn't like that across the pond."—Chicago Herald.
