A LUMP OF TIN.
Neither Congressman Bryan of Nebraska nor any other democratic congressman can infuse life into the dead body of tariff reform—so-called, but meaning free trade. There is an answer to speculative argument that admits of no gain-saying, and that answer has been made sufficiently public. It is the lump of tin.

After several gentlemen in congress had proven by a course of most ingenious reasoning that metallic tin could not be produced in the United States, a gentleman from California, Bowers by name, walked up to the speaker's desk and laid upon it a shining block, fifty pounds in weight, and remarked that it was tin, and that it was from the Temescal mines. He said no more than this. The lump of tin did the rest of the talking.

So after Mr. Bryan has eloquently demonstrated that the tariff increases the price to the consumer, Mrs. John Smith, wife of Consumer John Smith, informs her husband that the new carpet, purchased by her yesterday, is of American make, and that it is of better quality and of lower price than any other that she has bought during her quarter century of wedded life. And then Consumer John remembers that the suit of clothes purchased last week cost him less than a suit that he bought three years ago, and not more than one he bought last year. He reads Mr. Bryan's eloquent and logical speech—but he has seen the lump of tin.

In like manner, after Mr. Bryan has demonstrated his "mastery of the subject" most conclusively and has proven, by an unanswerable array of English testimony, that the United States can not expect to sell its products to foreign countries so long as it buys manufactured goods from Americans rather than from Europeans, the secretary of the treasury produces his report of an unusually large export trade. This is placing the lump of tin where it belongs.

And so it goes. Some Mr. Bryan proves that tin plate can not be made in the United States, and the United States factories make 800 tons of it during the first seven months of increased protection. A Mr. Bryan proves that we can not make pearl buttons, and instantly about twenty pearl button factories spring up and give employment to 5,000 American people. A Mr. Bryan proves that there must be "higher prices on account of the tariff," and forthwith every housewife in America assures him that $10 will buy more dry goods in 1892 than $11 would buy in 1890. And, in short, no matter what the democratic Bryans eloquently say, some cruel messenger of fact marches up to the speaker's desk and lays the lump of tin in full sight of the audience.—Inter Ocean.

THE new tariff was not made without the fullest consultation with every important agricultural society in America. The farmers had been having pretty hard times. They knew just what the matter was. Their associations, composed of some of the ablest men in the United States, were unanimous in their sentiment as well of the cause as the remedy. They did not complain of the price of what they had to buy, for that, in all cases, was lower than ever before. The price of what they had to sell was what worried them. Agricultural values had been decreasing rapidly for many years and as rapidly agricultural imports into the country to compete with domestic products in our markets had been increasing. The farmers asked no more than that the influx of these foreign goods should be restrained by a fair tariff. Investigation showed that there had been an increase of the importations of foreign products from $40,000,000 in 1850 to $56,000,000 in 1889. "We do not necessarily pay too much for what we buy," said the farmers, "but we get too little for what we sell, and the reason of this is that the low tariff admits of this enormous importation."

THE ticket put up by the republicans Saturday night should be elected by a handsome majority, as it is composed of all young men, who are in favor of public improvements in the right direction.

H. N. DOVEY, in accepting the nomination for mayor, placed himself on record and pledged himself to the convention that he was in favor of public improvements.

THE republican convention Saturday night put up all young men, everything being unanimous and in favor of a clean ticket.

It is conceded by everyone that the republicans have put up the best men for councilmen in all the wards in the city.

THE republicans put up a ticket Saturday night that is hard to beat, all being young men.

New Washington Penn. People
Are not slow about taking hold of a new thing, if the article has merit. A few months ago David Byers, of that place, bought his first stock of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I have warranted every bottle and have not had one come back." 25 cent, 50 cent, and $1.00 bottles for sale by F. G. Fricke & Co., druggists.

AN ANCIENT IDOL.

The Modest Gay Ditty of the Early American Heathen.

The State Historical Society was enriched yesterday by an image of pottery supposed to be an idol of some historic race, probably the mound builders, says the Topeka Capital. The idol was found near Aron, Independence County, Arkansas, and was dug from a mound by relic hunters along with a number of decayed human bones, copper arrow heads and broken domestic utensils. It is the property of G. W. Hume, of Strasburg, Mo. The idol is seven inches in height by five inches in diameter. It is rudely constructed, having evidently been formed by hand, or at best very crude tools, from common clay, and afterward hardened by being dried in the sun.

The idol represents a human figure in a kneeling posture, the arms extending at the side. The features are rudely formed, yet, notwithstanding this, are not altogether repulsive, the nose being gracefully aquiline and the lips well formed. The ears are missing, but the remnants show that they were adorned with rings. The body is "squat" and might be said to resemble a foal. At the top of the head there is a hole which seems to have served a purpose, probably that of fastening a headdress to the figure. The image would hardly be catalogued with the works of art, but it is nevertheless an interesting relic.

The race whose ditty was represented by this clumsy bit of clay inhabited the Mississippi Valley from the great lakes to the gulf at a time to which the traditions of man runeth not. Who they were, where they came from, what their manner of life was, is all a mystery. True, many mounds, excavations and burying grounds of this lost people have been discovered, but so far they have given but little of their history. That they lived and died before the race of American Indians existed is proved by the fact that the traditions of the latter race contain no reference to this lost people, although their mounds and relics are mentioned. Many mounds of this kind are found in Missouri, Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, Ohio and Indiana, and a few have been discovered in nearly all of the states of the Mississippi Valley.

MUCH CRY AND LITTLE WOOL.

Result of an Interesting Discussion Concerning the German Flag.

Two well-dressed women stood among the throng at the ribbon counter in one of the large dry goods stores in Sixth avenue, a few days ago, says the N. Y. Tribune, and having at length obtained the services of a clerk one of them said: "I want to buy some narrow ribbon for favors, but I must have the colors of the German flag, and, strangely enough, neither my friend nor I can recall them. Do you remember what they are?" "I do not," said the girl politely, impressed apparently by the international character of her customers, "but the other young lady at this counter may know." "The other young lady" said she thought the colors were black and yellow.

"I am sure that isn't right," remarked an old customer who was sitting on the third stool down the counter. "Possibly the floor walker would know," suggested the clerk. "Ca-a-sh! Ask Mr. Fitzhugh to come here." That functionary having arrived the matter was duly referred to him. "There are three colors," he declared; "black, red and yellow." "Are you sure?" asked the two shoppers earnestly. "We cannot make a mistake." "I am almost sure that is wrong," interposed a young woman near by who had overheard the controversy; "my husband is a German, and I never heard of yellow in the German flag." "It might be buff," conceded the floor walker.

"I used to teach school in Indiana," remarked a tall woman with a catskin muff, "and I can settle this question. The colors in the German flag are red, white and yellow." This seemed authoritative, but somehow the various contestants didn't appear satisfied.

"There's Schwartz, the floor walker in the cotton department," suggested the stately Fitzhugh, "he's a German himself; he'll know. Cash, go and ask Mr. Schwartz to write the colors in the German flag on this card."

The Indiana school teacher did not look pleased, but the matter having gone to the Court of Appeals she rested her case, and the cash girl was back in a minute with the card. On it were written the words, "black, red and white." "That settles it. Thank you so much," said the two feminine shoppers gratefully, looking apprehensively at the listening throng. "How much is the narrow ribbon, please?" "Twenty-two cents a piece of ten yards is 'am," answered the girl expectantly. "Well, we need only a little; give me a yard of each color. How much will that be?" "Seven cents," murmured the clerk, staggered for a moment by the magnitude of the order, after the trouble of obtaining it. "The other young lady" and the Indiana school teacher tittered audibly, but there was no sign of a smile on the clerk's face as she drawled: "Shall I have the package sent up to your home, ma'am?"
