HAS A PERSISTENT HOOD.
Mr. Oliver J. Gosington Gives a Faint Outline of the Troubles That Pursue Him.

"I don't know why it is," said Mr. Gosington, "but when I travel I always seem to get the worst of it in some way; if there's anything going that isn't pleasant it comes to me."
"Yesterday I made a little trip to a place about fifty miles from the city. I went to the station early to get a seat by a window. I managed that all right; I got a window seat and just where I wanted, not at the end of the car, but about two-thirds back from the front, where I would ride easy and at the same time have something to look at ahead, and of course that all pleased me very much."
"At the first station out there got aboard the car at the forward end seven men, a very assorted lot of men, some tall, some short, some thick, some thin, and among them one man of phenomenal proportions, a giant of a man, with legs sticking out beneath and a head projecting up on top, and then I watched with fearful interest the procession as it started down the car, for I was seized with a mortal terror that the big man would want to sit with me. Really he ought not to, for I sat two-thirds of the way down the car and there were plenty of vacant seats ahead; but you never can tell about a thing till it's settled."
"I watched that procession coming with a great and fearful interest, the big man bringing up the rear, and then with increasing hopefulness I saw it dwindle as one member after another of it dropped out to take the first seat he came to, until all were seated except the giant, who was left alone still four rows in front of me and with three vacant seats in those four rows to choose from, and then my hope ran high, but he kept coming and passed them all until he came to mine, where he halted."
"Is this seat taken?" he said to me, and what could I say but:
"No, sir; and then he sat down, sitting partly on that vacant place in the seat and partly on Oliver J. Gosington."
"So I drew the fat man after all; but things like that happen to me whenever I travel."

Retains Health by Fasting.
To prove that complete abstinence from food for indefinite periods is not only conducive to good health but also to perennial youth, Miss Claire de Serval, niece of the famous "fasting" Dr. Tanner, is submitting herself to a remarkable series of experiments at the Royal Charles hospital in Berlin. Miss Serval ended at noon the other day in perfect health a fast of ten days, without nourishment of any kind, either liquid or solid. During that time she lived in a glass cage, into which fresh air was pumped by a motor. She was then removed from the cage and placed in the ordinary ward, but she intends to abstain from food for another 20 days, living in the meantime on mineral water. Her weight has decreased from 114 pounds to 101 pounds, but her condition otherwise is perfectly normal. She stated, at the end of the tenth day, that she never once felt ill from lack of food and drink, and was entirely free from fever or headache. The young lady says that she was induced to become a "faster" in order to cure herself of chronic headaches and lack of appetite, and also because she finds she emerges rejuvenated after a period of self-imposed starvation.

Telegraph Letters.
A novelty in correspondence, recently inaugurated by the French post office department, has met with such success that it might be tried all over the world. This is the telegraphic letter. The hours between 9 p. m. and 4 a. m. are not busy ones for the French telegraphic lines. So the postal authorities decided to turn these hours to some use. Therefore if one misses the post for a provincial town in France to-day one can at the rate of 700 words for 20 cents have the letter telegraphed and delivered by the first post next morning. The scheme is very simple and is working admirably in Paris.

Quantity.
"Don't you admire the big hats that women are wearing?"
"Well," answered Mr. Moskton, "I must say they look more like the money's worth."

DEVOTION TO RULER COVER UP DEFECTS

KOREANS SHOW HIGH DEGREE OF PATRIOTISM.
Had Decided Freely to Give Their Lives to Warn Emperor of What They Considered Grave Danger.

Out of Korea comes a story of the fanatical devotion shown to the shadow emperor of the land by those of his subjects who still resent the rule of the Japanese and view each move of their virtual masters with deep suspicion. In this instance several patriots were willing to let themselves be run over by a railroad train if only his majesty might be warned by their death that he was flying into the trap set for his feet by Prince Ito.
A month ago the emperor announced that he was going to leave Seoul and take a trip to Fusan, the most easterly city of the peninsula and wholly a Japanese settlement. This was an unprecedented thing for the emperor to do, since for countless generations Korean kings and emperors had been content to sit in the hall of consultations in the Mulberry palace at Seoul and let subjects from other parts of the land come to them to pay homage. Despite the protests of the patriots Prince Ito, who was engineering the trip, ruled and the emperor set out over the Seoul-Fusan railway to visit the seaport at the other terminal.
It became known by the Koreans along the route that the Japanese battleship Azuma was to anchor in the harbor of Fusan and that a part of the welcoming ceremonies that were to occur in Fusan was to be a luncheon to the emperor on board the ship. Immediately the rumor grew to the conviction that as soon as Prince Ito had the emperor safely on the Azuma's deck anchor would be hoisted and the last of the line of Korean rulers would be whisked off to Japan, there to die in a dungeon.
Perhaps the simple Koreans had some justification for believing that the crafty resident-general would like to execute a coup like that; certainly the hand of the Japanese had made such startling moves on the imperial chess board at Seoul that even a duplication of the murder that was done in the Mulberry palace some years ago at the instance of a Japanese minister would not seem improbable to the Koreans.
At any rate the emperor had his luncheon on board the battleship in Fusan harbor and was put safely back on his own territory again. During the course of the luncheon Prince Ito made conversation by telling the puppet ruler that he had learned that at Taiku, one of the large towns on the line of the railway, a party of patriots, convinced that the emperor was going to his doom, had determined to lay themselves on the rails as his train approached the station. They believed that by this act of sacrifice their monarch might be made to see that he was approaching immediate danger.
The patriots had been dissuaded by a very material Japanese policeman.

In Memory of —
Old New England graveyards are not the only ones which contain curious epitaphs. The old-time dweller of Maine who "died of a falling tree," as his headstone asserts, had a fellow in misfortune in far-off Australia, as is shown by W. A. Baillie-Grohman's "The Tyrol and the Tyrolean."
A wooden slab, painted with the representation of a prostrate tree under which lies a man in spread-eagle attitude, bears testimony to the violent death of "Johann Lemberger, aged 52 1/2 years. This upright and virtuous youth was squashed by a falling tree."
The record of Michael Gerstner is even more succinct and convincing. He "Climbed up, fell down, and was dead." —Youth's Companion.

Defense of Canned Products.
That foods properly canned do not deteriorate with age was a statement made at a dinner of canners in Chicago a few days ago. "Suppose a customer desired a can of corn on February 22, 1920," said one of the speakers, "and was given corn canned in 1909. It would be rejected with a demand for 'something fresher,' and, although the 1909 article would be found as fresh as that of 1920 it would be lost. At a recent banquet in London canned fruit taken from the ruins of Pompeii was found to be fresh and fine. There should be a law to compel the canning of all products in such a manner that they would keep for ages."

American Horses for Brazil.
James R. Krene and J. B. Haggan recently sold in Buenos Aires 75 thoroughbreds from their riding and breeding farms in the United States. The sales were only fairly successful because American horses were previously unknown there.

Room at the Top.
"There is plenty of room at the top," quoted the moralizer.
"Yes," rejoined the demoralizer, "and there always will be unless facilities for getting there are improved."

REASON FOR CLOTHING THE HUMAN FORM DIVINE.
According to Writer in London Periodical, Vanity is Responsible for Garments Prescribed by Present Fashion.

It was the opinion of Cotawayo, a noble African monarch who despised all garments, that we took to clothing to keep ourselves clean, because we were too lazy to wash ourselves. This, however, was an error on his majesty's part. The simple fact is that we adopted clothes because we were ashamed of our appearance, says a writer in London Ideas.
To begin with, leg coverings were invented to conceal bony knees and shapeless calves. Boots were artfully devised to conceal off ugly feet from the public gaze and silence loud jeers.
The hat, it is easy to see, was the crafty invention of some frivolous patriarch with a bald head, who was anxious to hide it in order that he could cut a youthful figure with the ladies.

Gloves were devised by pretentious women of the lower middle class in Herculaneum, who wanted to pose as gentfolk. Having to do their own housework, they hit upon this ingenious plan of covering the redness and roughness of their hands. Thus they were able to cut a dash and delude society into the belief that they kept servants. Hence the name "kid" gloves.
Socks derived their name originally from shocks, as describing the effect frequently produced on the mind by the spectacle of feet in their naked size and simplicity.
Shirts, and, after them, doublets and coats, were resources to cover pigeon breasts, hollow chests and curved spines. The collar is a development of the silken scarf or bandage, first worn by that hideous old porcupine, Rameses I, pharaoh of Egypt, to conceal a boil on his neck.

Coming to the face, we find the veil. This was introduced owing to the annoyance occasioned to King Ptolemy by the countenance of one of his ladies. She developed a squint, and one day the king, being uncertain whether she was eyeing him or not, shouted furiously: "Cover that woman's face!" The offensive countenance was instantly obscured by a window curtain torn down by a resourceful courtier. And thus veils for objectionable faces rapidly became popular.
Now, we have been told, and are constantly being told again, by countless scientists, that in strength and beauty we are a deteriorating race. Our forefathers—and mothers—had their little flaws in figure, but, compared with us, they were perfect Venuses and Adonises.
A high authority says that "scarcely one man in a hundred is properly proportioned, and most women would be shapeless without the cunning curves of their stays." Another stern authority says: "We are a physically degenerate people, round shouldered, sunken loined, narrow chested, crooked ribbed, spay footed, knock kneed, short winded and weak backed."
So, on the whole, clothes are not only desirable, but indispensable. To cast them off and permit an astonished universe to see us as we really are would be a great mistake.

Hungry Thespians.
They looked like actors, or rather they looked as if they would have been actors if some manager with more than the usual discernment would recognize their ability and give them a job, says "The Stroller" in the Portland (Me.) Express. Just now they were staring through the window of a popular-priced restaurant in Congress street absorbed in the unerring accuracy of the chef as the griddle cakes were flipped into the air by him, only to fall gracefully back into the greasy mark they had just quitted. The tall man jingled some keys in his pocket and the little one pulled his belt another notch.
"Lord!" said the big one; "I'm hungry enough to eat my own words."
"I'm in just as bad," complained the little one. "I feel as though I could bolt a front door."

Figures on Drink Question.
Speaking before the Church of England Temperance society recently the bishop of London said that, as the result of an inquiry regarding the drink evil, 15 doctors stated that in the middle class there was a decrease of drinking, 88 in fashionable practice spoke of the increase among the well-to-do, and 93 of the increase among working women. At the request of the home office 23 London public houses were watched for four days, and 29,540 women, with 10,471 children, entered. The chief cause, said the bishop, of drinking among the well-to-do was want of occupation; among the poorer classes it was overwork and worry.
