PIONEER NEBRASKA

Ex-Senator S. L. Thomas' Address at Pioneer Day Banquet

Senator S. L. Thomas and his estimable wife boarded the morning train today, bound for their California home. Senator Thomas has long been identified with Cass county's interests, and we feel a personal loss in his going from our midst, and we sincerely wish him well. The community will lose an honored citizen. He was one of the pioneers of this county and his life here has been an open book. At the pioneers' meeting, held during the carnival in this city, Senator Thomas delivered an address, which we give below.

After the banquet, Hon. R. B. Windham, acting as toastmaster, called on Senator Thomas among the first, and the senator responded as follows:

"After some four months of constant wandering in covered wagons my father and mother and their family on August 1, 1856, settled on the west bank of Four Mile creek, four miles west of where the city of Plattsmouth now stands. The next day we put up our shanty. The structure was somewhat rude, being of cottonwood sheathing hauled there by my father some time before from a sawmill on the Iowa side of the river.

"On the 10th of August, 1856, five young men in a hack drove up to our place and inquired the whereabouts of one Lawrence Johnson. They had many kinds of musical instruments with them, and they stated that Mr. Johnson was their father. My father directed them a mile up the creek, and said to the young men that they would find him there living in a canvas tent. I was sent with them to act as pilot, which I did. The next evening as we sat outside our shanty we were surprised to hear the music of a brass band which floated on the breeze, and we could hardly realize that the tones could come for the distance of a mile and be heard so distinctly.

"We were listening to the first brass band which had come to the territory of Nebraska. We were delighted and cheered, and night after night we listened to this little pioneer band with delight, and we felt that we had not gone beyond civilization. It was such a striking contrast to the whoop of the red man and the howl of the prairie wolf, which we had been listening to during the previous ten days. How eager I was to be in their midst and take a horn and play with them. Finally my eagerness was satisfied when the leader of the band, Prof. L. F. Johnson met me and asked me to take the tuba in the brass band and the bass violin in the string band. I played with the pioneer band of the territory of Nebraska for eighteen years. Some time after, one evening when we went to practice, the leader said to us that he wished that the next time we played out, that we should watch our music closely, as there would be come one present who knew what good playing was and who could detect a discord instantly. When the occasion came, sure enough there was a stranger there, and the leader took us over where the young man was and introduced us to Conrad Schlater, a young man just from the east. The stranger was asked to take a hand at the string instruments, which he cheerfully did, and we soon learned to know and love our new acquisition. And now thinking back over a half century, and remembering him as a brother musician with such pleasure, and also cherishing memories of him as a neighbor living on his farm west of mine, it seems but yesterday, and it annoys me that I fail to find words to express to him the admiration we felt for him. I believe it was Virgil who said 'Caesar was a descendant of God, and that he would always be a God to him.' This certainly was the greatest words of praise which could be said in a pagan land. But in a Christian land I believe more profound words of affection of a dear friend can be said when you say that there is one man at least 'who loves his neighbor as himself and does unto others as he would be done by.' Such a man is Conrad Schlater."

The senator would have spoken much longer, but each speaker was limited to five minutes, and as the chairman had called time he resumed his seat amid the applause of his listeners. He asked, however, that the following little poem, composed by his father, Thomas Thomas, be read, which was done:

Who came in early days,
In search of home in the Indian land
And settled here to stay.

On young Nebraska's rolling plain,
Hardship and toil we have shared,
And here we now have met again
To share a feast prepared.

Come one, come all; old settlers, come,
In love and liberty,
And make this day a special home
Of joy and pleasure true.

Free to think and free to speak;
Let's all in union join.
This social feast we'll seek to make
Enduring on our minds.
