

conceal something.

And then came her voice. Her first words brought a glow to Orme's heart:

"I know that you are mistaken. No American has those papers." Orme breathed his relief. Then she added

So she did doubt him after all. Well, he could not blame her. The scene in the room-the frankness of the Japanese, which could only be attributed to discomfiture; the empty envelope;

the torn prospectuses on the floor, all these conditions pointed to the truth of

On the other hand, there was his appearance on the lake, an hour or more after the episode on the campus. Might it not occur to her that, had he already secured the papers, he would have had no object in the further pursuit of the Japanese? But, perhaps she would think that he was seeking Arima to sell the papers back to him; or that,

in spite of his appearance of surprise.

he had been a witness of her abduction and had gone out on the water to save her. There were so many things

she might think! Indeed, that dublous word "unless" might even signify,

"unless he has secured the papers since I last saw him.' But no; she would gather from the situation in which she found her enemies that the envelope had not been out of their possession since it was taken from the tree. Orme shut his lips hard. Her doubt of him would have to be endured, even though it shattered his pleasant dream of her complete and Alcatrante meantime, was studying

"Do you mind telling me how you

She answered indifferently: "Supposing the Japanese had stolen the papers, I searched Maku's room at our

there with the name 'Arima' printed

Alcatrante bowed. "You are cleverer than most Americans, my dear young lady," he said. His lips curved

"That," she replied, "is as it may be.

Again he smiled. "Ah," he exclaimed, "trickery is the detail work of diplomacy." Then with a shade of seriousness in his voice, he asked:

'Why did you use that word 'unless?' "

committal answer, and if Alcatrante

had hoped to soothe her into friendliness and draw from her a clue to her

There was another period of silence, broken at last by the Japanese. "The fact that we have failed, my dear

young lady," he said, "makes concealment unnecessary. I know, of course, that this matter will never become public. You understand that the representatives of great nations often have to take steps which, as private citizens,

There is no more to be said. Good-

"Yes," she answered, "I understand.

There was a step and the sound of Alcatrante and the Japanese looked at each other. "We have not falledyet," said Alcatrante in French. "The girl does not know where the documents are, or she would not have come here. If her father does not have them before midnight our plans are safe. We remain merely at a loss as to the details of the documents, and we already know what they contain in

'Yes," agreed the Japanese, "things

"Find the American! That is what

"We had an appointment with him

this morning," said Alcatrante grimly,

"but when you said that your man had the envelope, it no longer seemed necessary. We-you and I-still have the same object in view. I suggest that

"As you wish," said the Japanese calmly. Doubtless he knew that Al-catrante was grasping at a straw

which might still give him the advantage in future negotiations. "I am honored by your co-operation thus far."

beckoning to Poritol, left the room.

Alcatrante returned the bow and,

The Japanese minister turned to Arima and talked rapidly in his native tongue. From his manner it was plain that he was giving orders. At last,

with a little gesture of authority, he put on his hat and walked out. The Arima, now alone, seated himself in a chair and appeared to meditate.

Again his hands were clasped about his knees and his beady eyes fixed on cane. For fully fifteen minutes he door closed after him with a slam.

we now set out separately."

He bowed formally.

a general way."

"Yes?"

the door closing. She had gone.

they would never think of."

suspicions, he was disappointed.

"Why, indeed?" She made this non-

But I have not your admiration for trickery, Mr. Alcatrante."

nto a smile that disclosed his fangs.

happened to come to this place?" he

the girl with curious eyes. His look was both perplexed and admiring.

sympathetic understanding.

in the corner."

the dubious word-"Unless-"

the explanation she had heard.

CHAPTER XI.

The Way Out.

The sound of the girl's voice brought the men in the room to life. Her words were shaded to a tone of fearless scorn which must have bitten deep, for Alcatrante and the Japanese minister looked like schoolboys caught in wrong-doing. The South American gnawed at his lip; the Japanese looked at the floor, and Orme now realized that the manner which had seemed so indicative of a masterful personality was the manner which springs from power-the manner that is built upon the assurance of a tremendous back-

The tension was broken by Poritol. The little man's dismay suddenly gave way to an eager and voluble excitement, and he rushed across the room, exclaiming: "Oh, my dear miss-"

"No names," commanded Alcatrante, harshly, turning to his subordinate.

"My dear young lady," continued Poritol breathlessly, "I am the victim of your misunderstanding. You will permit me to explain."

She answered with an even, cutting edge in her voice: "You cannot explain, Mr. Poritol."

'But-" he began, blind to her mean-

"I do not care to hear you," she said; and Poritol slunk back to his former position. From his face it was clear that he had no desire except to get away.

Meantime Alcatrante aroused himself. 'My friend here"-he indicated the Japanese-"and myself are here on business which concerns our two nations. Your appearance, I presume, is due to a desire to engage the professional services of Mr. Arima. Or perhaps you were trying to find the fortune teller upstairs." He barely repressed his sneer.

The girl did not answer. She re mained by the door, and but for the attitudes of the others Orme would not have known but that she had gone. As it was, he could read in their bearing the disconcerting effects of her continued disdain.

The Japanese spoke. "Will you enter, miss, or shall we direct you on your way? Arima will come out and talk with you, if you so wish."

Still no answer. To Orme, in his hiding, there was something uncanny in her failure to respond. But he could picture her-Truth, calm in the presence of subterfuge.

"Will you not state your desire?" Again the Japanese. He was smiling now, with the false coliteness of his

And then she spoke: "That envelope on the floor was stolen from my father's home. It bears my father's Before Alcatrante could stop him, little Poritol, with some vague hope of making amends, had snatched up the torn envelope and taken it to her. He returned to the range of Orme's vision with an air of virtuous importance.

"The contents," said the girl-"where are the papers?"

Alcatrante and the Japanese looked at each other. It was as if they said, "In view of our failure we might as well make a clean breast of it." But Alcatrante was too cunning to take the initiative in confession. He left that to the Japanese, who spoke unhesi-

"The only papers in the envelope were these." He picked up the torn prospectuses from the floor and held them extended in his hand. "Our sur prise is as great as yours."

"Do you expect me to believe that?" "Whether you believe it or not, my dear young lady, it is true."

There was a moment of silence, then the Japanese continued: "We have read am interested in your former advice." son to think that the envelope was for a time last night in the possession of an American, and that he substituted she will try to do." these circulars for whatever the envelope may have held."

Orme's impulse to declare himself was almost irresistible. A man whose instincts were less cautious would have thrown the table over and ranged himself beside the girl. Orme was not fearful, but he knew that the chances of a successful outcome would be lessened by exposure. Even if he and the girl got safely from the room, there would be a pursuit, and the risk of losing the papers would be great.

As for the girl, she clearly was in no danger. These men would not harm

But would the assertion of the Japanese lead her to doubt Orme? Would she believe that he had actually recovered the papers the night before and kept them for his own purposes? He remembered that he had given her only the scantiest account of his adventure at the tree, for he had wished to spare her the details of an incident that meant her disappointment as well as his own. She might now readily attribute his reticence to a desire to sat thus; then, with a little clucking sound, he leaped to his feet and hurried into the next room.

Now was Orme's chance. He lifted the table cover and rose to his feet. Arima had not closed the door after him, but Orme was not in the line of direct view into the other room, and he had to risk the possibility of being seen before he reached the window.

Or should he try for the door? It all depended upon what part of the next room Arima was in; but the window seemed safer, for the opening and closing of the door would be sure to attract attention.

Orme moved toward the window slowly, watching the opening through which Arima had disappeared. He got half-way to the window; three more steps would bring him to the sill. And then, without warning, Arima leaped into the room. Even in that moment Orme caught a glimps of a mirror in the farther room, and knew that the Japanese had seen his reflection.

At this instant another man appeared, close behind Arima. A bandage was wrapped around his head. It was Maku, who presumably had been in the apartment all the time.

Orme stood little chance of overcoming the two. Quick as cats, with muscles like steel springs and a great variety of scientific tricks of offense and defense, they could handle him as they willed in a direct encounter. If Orme had had a revolver, he would now have drawn it. Yet he knew that this was not a case for firearms. Obviously, if he used a dangerous weapon in these men's rooms and was afterward caught, it would fare hard with him, for the real facts would be suppressed and he would be sentenced as an ordinary housebreaker, perhaps with some clemency due to his personal standing.

A quick intuition told him that he would not escape lightly if they fairly got their hands on him. The two Japanese had hitherto shown much patience with him. Their desire seemed to have been to avoid hurting him any more than was necessary. But there is a limit to Japanese patience. The scathing words of the Japanese minister must still be burning in Arima's brain. And Maku, who had controlled himself while Orme was following him through the streets of the North side, no longer had a diplomatic reason for restraining his rage against the man who had struck him down. In any event, the eyes of Arima and Maku glittered angrily, and Orme realized that he could expect no mercy.

He caught up a chair and raised It over his head, prepared to bring it down on Arima, who was only a few feet from him and coming fast.

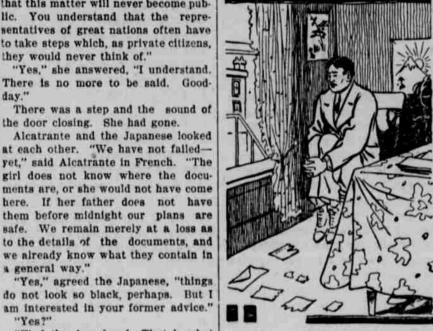

The Japanese raised his arms to fend the expected blow. With sudden inspiration, Orme hurled the chair at his opponent's feet. There was a crash. Arima sprawled headlong. Maku, who was close behind, tried to leap over Arima, but his feet went through the rungs of the chair, and he, too, crashed

As he threw the chair, Orme leaped back. Before the Japanese could get She must have been a handsome out of their tangle, he had jumped | over the window sill and was running up the fire escape. Madam Alla was at her window, a look of startled inquiry on her face. She stepped back as he crowded into the room.

"Quick!" he said. "They'll be after me. Hide me somewhere."

"Come!" She took his sleeve and pulled him to a corner. There she pushed aside the dingy hanging and Orme saw that the wall was covered with a wainscoting that ran from floor

The medium looked at him with bright eyes. "You're the real sort," she whispered, and a wave of color in her cheeks brought back the suggestion of girlish beauty. "I saw that scrap there through a hole in the floor. You're the goods." She pressed his arm almost affectionately, then, with her free hand, she pushed against the paneling. Noiselessly a section of it turned inward, disclosing a dark cavlty. "Get in!"

For Fully 15 Minutes He Sat Thus.

Orme quickly slipped into the darkness, the panel closed, and he heard the swish of the hanging as it dropped against the board.

It was not too soon. Two soft thuds told him that the Japanese had dropped over the sill into the room. He heard the woman give feigned scream of surprise. 'Scuse us, miss"-It was Arima's voice-"we looking for sneak thief. He come in here." "Be off with you. I've just come from the front room there, and there wasn't a soul came in."

We saw him." "He must have gone out to the hall, then." The woman's voice had a note of mollification—as though she had two Japanese to enter the apartment. "I didn't hear him."

A few words of Japanese colloquy; then Arima: "I look around. My friend go to hall." A door closed; evidently Maku had gone out; and then Orme heard steps. After this there was a long walt, while the Japanese examined the other rooms, the woman evidently offering him her aid. At last they returned.

"Well, I go back," sald Arima. "I saw him come in the window. My friend will know. See you later," Presently the woman raised the hanging and whispered through the boards: "He went back down the fire escape. His friend's in the hall. He'll find out you haven't went down, and then he'll come back."

"I'll try the roof," whispered Orme. "Perhaps I can get on to another house that way."

"Watt till I see." She walked away, but soon returned.

"No use," he heard her say. "That Jap's a sitting on the fire escape watching. He grinned when I looked down." Orme pondered, "Help me out of this," he whispered, "and there'll be something in it for you."

She moved impatiently. "Cut it out! don't want nothing. You're a good sport, that's all." She paused. "Not that I'd mind having a present. But I don't want no money."

Orme caught the distinction, "I'll remember," he said, "And what shall I do now?

"You'll have to stay in there a while, I guess. "I simply must get away-and within an hour or two." "I'll manage that," sae answered con fidently. "But how-?"

"You'll see. Just leave it to me." Orme smiled to himself, there in the

"There's just one thing," he whispered. "Whatever is done, will have to be done without help from outside. This is not a matter for the police." "I understand. Why can't you just leave it to me? I don't believe you trust me a little bit!" "But I do," he protested. "I am absolutely in your hands."

He heard her sigh faintly. "I'm going to put down the window now." she said. "It ain't safe for me to stand here talking to you unless I do. That Arima fellow might pop up the fire escape any time."

She was back in a few moments. He had heard the window creak down, and had wondered whether the action would add to Arima's suspicion.

"If he comes up now," she explained in an undertone, "the glare on the outside of the window will keep him from seeing in very plain."

After that she did not speak for ments of her body, as she leaned lady of seventeen. against the panel, were audible to about her-how she had happened to take up the career of fortune-telling. woman; even now she was not unat-

The delay grew more and more irksome. It seemed to Orme as though he had been behind the panel for hours. After a while he asked: "What time is it?"

"About two o'clock. Ain't you hungry?'

Orme laughed softly. "I hadn't thought about it."

"Wait a minute." She moved away. When she returned she pulled up the hanging and opened the panel. In her hand was a thick sandwich "I was just going to eat my own lunch when you came back through the window," she explained.

He took the sandwich. She looked at him boldly. He was standing close to her in the opening. There was an expression that was almost defiant in her eyes. "I-I want my present." "You shall have it, Madam Alia," he

"You ain't my kind-and it won't make no difference to you." Her voice faltered and her eyes dropped. "I want you to kiss me."

Orme looked at her, and understood her gently on the lips. There was no disloyalty in it. He was simply satishe was of a different world; he knew that the world was all one, though parhe could not correct her view.

She clung to him for a moment after his lips left hers, then released herself from his clasp and moved back into self, but respecting her reticence of was again in darkness.

For a time he stood there quietly. His back was against the wall-his shut him off from the room. He wonlighted it.

The inclosure seemed to extend all Farther along, lying on the floor and standing against the wall, were contrivances of which at first he could make robes-white and black.

The truth flashed into Orme's mind. He was in Madam Alia's ghost closet!

To be continued.

Carl Sergum was an Omaha pa senger on the afternoon train today, where he was called on business.

The Winning Trio

SUITS

SUITS

THESE PRICES

SUITS

have won the favor of the wideawake buyer. They are lower than good suits can be bought for elsewhere, and they are lower than we can sell them for again. Your chance is NOW, and the few remaining suits at these prices are not going to be here very long. Just think of a rure all wool blue serge suit, hand tailored for $12.75; or an all wool cassimere suit for $9.75, or one of our fine $25 or $30 QUALITY suits for $17.75. Terms strictly cash.

C. E. Wescott's

THE HOME OF SATISFACTION

darkness. Of course, he would leave it to her; but he did not see how she was to rid him of the watchful Japanese. CHARLES A KINNOMAN, A FORMER PLATTSMOUTH CITIZEN DIES

Born in This City About Forty-four Years Ago and For the Past Thirteen Years Has Lived in Lincoln.

From Wednesday's Dally. Charles A. Kinoman, of 1258 Vine street, Lincoln, died this morning at his mother, Mrs. Louisa Kinoman, of 2 o'clock of a complication of erysipe- this city, and three brothers and two slipped past him in the closet, and be las and pneumonia, from which he sisters. His brothers being William, had been suffering for the past two Philip, and L. L., of this city. His weeks. Mr. Kinoman's mother, Mrs. sisters are Mrs. Nellie Gartleman and Louisa Kinoman, and his sister, Mrs. Mrs. Ida Fields, both of Plattsmouth. Gartleman, went to Lincoln Monday to attend his bed side.

about thirteen years ago.

married to Miss Orpha Featherly, a and real estate business, teacher. To this union three chilwere born, who with his widow sur- day, afternoon.

vive to murn his loss.

Mr. Kinoman is also survived by

Mr. Kinoman was highly esteemed by all who knew him, and his friends The deceased leaves a wife and in this city are numerous. He was some time, but the occasional move- three children, the oldest a young prominent in political circles at Lin-Charles A. Kinoman was born in was the choice of his party last fall Orme. He found himself wondering Plattsmouth about forty-four years for the office of county clerk of Lanago, and grew to manhood in this caster county. For a time after recity. He was for some years em- moving to Lincoln Mr. Kinoman was ployed in the freight department of connected with the freight departthe Burlington here, and was freight ment of the Burlington there, but agent when transferred to Lincoln later was with the Western Weighers' Association, and at the time of his About eighteen years ago he was death was engaged in the insurance

The funeral will occur from the dren, two daughters and one son, home at 2 o'clock tomorrow, Thurs-

Assurance that Nothing Will be Done at the Present Session of Congress.

It is given out with an assurance that can be termed official that there will be no parcels post legislation at this session of congress. This He put his arms around her and kissed ought to be final so far as pending bills at least are concerned. The nation-wide proposed parcels post at fying the craving of this poor woman's soul—a craving for a tribute to which one uniform carrying price has no NIGHT POLICEMAN TROUT she could always revert as the symbol backing outside merchandising in a of a high friendliness. She felt that few points. The parcels post on rural ruotes is simply a subterfuge, an attempt to gain by indirection and titioned off by artificial barriers, but deceit that which cannot be gained by nation-wide measure at one carrying price. It is admitted that the rural route bill had no motive bethe room, her face averted. Was it to hind it except to use it as an enterhide a blush? Orme did not ask him- ing wedge to secure the unlimited parcels post. On account of its conspirit, silently closed the panel and ception in deceit in this way it was unworthy of serious consideration, says the Lincoln Trade Review. If hands easily touched the paneling that you get to the real sentiment of those who favor in a general way parcels dered what this secret place was for, post and individualize the sentiment and taking a match from his pocket he it will be found that nineteen out of every twenty, when they analyze the question, favor a zone system of the way across the side of the room. charges and a post that would pay its own way. None of the bills in congress are along these lines. None of nothing-poles, pieces of tin, and- the present bills or none likely to be were those masks, heaped in the cor- presented contemplate the zone sysner? From a row of pegs hung long tem because that would not give the advantages to the special interests who have thus far been the impelling power behind the bills. The one argument that has caused most people to allign themselves as favorable to parcels post, is that the express companies are opposed to them because they now have nearly a monopoly of the carrying of parcels. But there is an easier solution for getting away from this monopoly than the one preposed by creating another one. Make the railroads do the express business of the country as they already do the carrying and then the parcel carrying will be subject to the same regulations and rates that prevail in freight carrying and which protect the public entirely in a reasonable price for the carrying, so that the railroads would be simply adding to their duties as common carriers and great department of government would not need to abandon the foundation on which it is laid, the promotion of communication, to become a competitor in the carry trade.

SHOOTS A MAD DOG

Every indication of an early spring is in evidence just now. Sunday atternoon a thunder shower, attended with more lightning than was seen all last summer, visited this vicinity. And yesterday afternoon night policeman Henry Trout killed a dog on north Sixth street which had every symptom of hydrophobia. The dog was acting queerly, frothing at the mouth, blood issuing from his nostril. Some of the citizens in the neighborhood became alarmed at the dog's actions and sent for the police. The dog was dispatched at once. .

Gus Hyers, of Havelock, was a Plattsmouth visitor between trains for a few hours today.

Highest prices paid for all farm